Policy Chiefs Tell of Cash Paid to Hines In Campaign

Banker Taxed $5,000, $125 a Week, Jury Hears in N. Y.

Schultz 'Armed In' When Racket Lost

A Great Day for Players Gave Him Chance to Seize Control.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 19.—Two Harlem policy bankers, "Big Joe" Ison, also known as "Spasm," and Alexander Pompez, testified today at the trial of James J. Hines, Tammany leader, on charges of conspiring to protect Dutch Schultz's illegal enterprises, that they were heavy contributors, through Schultz, to the Democratic city campaign of 1933.

This was the campaign in which it is alleged Hines enlisted the aid of Schultz to elect William C. Dodge district attorney, saying that Dodge was "stupid, respectable and 'his' man."

Ison testified that George Weinberg, a Schultz lieutenant who was then in charge of his policy bank, levied upon him two contributions of $2,500 each for that campaign, and also collected $125 every week with the explanation that it was turned over to Hine's Monongahela Democratic Club. Pompez testified that Schultz taxed him $10,000 for the campaign, and said further he was told that every policy operator in Schultz's Harlem "combination" contributed similarly.

Two More Witnesses.

Testimony by Pompez late this afternoon before Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora also named the Cayuga Democratic Club as the rendezvous to which he was called to meet with Schultz and a group of his gangsters in early 1932, when "the Dutchman" was putting pressure upon him to force him into the "combination."

District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey introduced two witnesses besides Pompez today to tell of raids on Pompez's policy bank on Thanksgiving Eve of 1932, leading up to the story of how 16 operatives of the bank, caught sorting slips, were subsequently discharged by a magistrate in Washington Heights Court. In his bill of particulars, Dewey has named the late Magistrate Francis J. Erwin and Magistrate Hulon Capshaw as under Hines' influence in the alleged protection of policy racketeers.

Pompez, on the witness stand today, started to tell of a hearing of his arrested employes before Magistrate "Cap——" when he was interrupted by Lloyd Paul Stryker, chief

Symphony Leader's Wife Shot by Servant

Maid's Estranged Mate Confesses Attack in Hollywood.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Aug. 19.—A former servant shot and critically wounded Mrs. Karl Krueger, 38, wife of the conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra, while she was walking along crowded Hollywood boulevard today, police announced tonight.

Charles E. McDonald broke down after an hour's questioning and admitted that he shot Mrs. Krueger three times, then drove away in a large black sedan, according to police.

McDonald changed his story, police said, after his attorney whom he had consulted before he surrendered, turned over to police an automatic pistol from which four bullets had been fired. McDonald's divorced wife still works for the Krueger family.

Officers were unable to locate immediately the orchestra conductor.

Identification of the gun victim was made by Mrs. Roscoe Sarles, manager of the swank apartment house where Mrs. Krueger and her young daughter had lived for the past year, and where her husband resided when visiting in Los Angeles.

MacDonald left Mrs. Krueger's employ after his wife divorced him several months ago.

Witnesses said Mrs. Krueger had just parked her car and was walking toward the dancing school when the assailant's car pulled up to the curb and three shots were fired.

MRS. EMITA KRUEGER.

Mrs. Krueger stumbled and fell as the third bullet crashed into her chest.

Italian Move For Peace in China Seen

Japan Refuses to Let U. S. Gunboat Sail Down Yangtze.

War in the East.

Secret Italian efforts to settle the war in China were reported in London today, involving setting up of a new government to deal with Japan.

Japan's Admiral Oikawa refused to permit the U. S. gunboat Monocacy to proceed down the Yangtze River.

In Tokyo the cabinet adopted new war measures and prepared to mobilize 1,000,000 men to continue the war.

Truce Efforts.

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 19.—Italy secretly is attempting to mediate the Chinese-Japanese war and has reached a tentative understanding with former Premier Wang Ching-wei of China that he will head a revised Chinese central government and make peace with Japan after her armies capture China's present provisional capital in Hankow, a non-British diplomat asserted tonight.

The information came immediately after Britain had informed Japan that she can reach no agreement with regard to China until Japan gives airtight assurances that British rights in China will be respected.

Will Join Anti-Red Pact.

The diplomat described Wang as "now virtually second in command to Chang Kai-shek in Hankow," and said Italian agents, who have been working in Shanghai, Hankow and Hongkonk since June, have obtained his agreement to these sugestions:

Wang, who represents a considerable peace faction among the rightwing conservatives of the Chinese Nationalist (Kuomintang) Party, will send a representative to Tokyo to discuss terms with Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye.

Wang will press for leniency for Chiang Kai-shek, whom the Japanese have sworn to crush, in view of the fact that his consent will be necessary to affect a "peace" government under Wang.

If Wang does come into power, his government will adhere to the German-Japanese-Italian declaration against communism.

The Japanese Ambassador, Shigeru Yoshida, visited Acting Foreign Secretary Sir Lancelot Oliphant at the foreign office this afternoon to discuss "the possibility of lessening the strain under which British-Japanese relations are laboring," and, it was understood, was given a clear outline of the British position.

He was informed politely, accord-

High Czech Posts Given To Sudetens

Runciman Backs Move, but Nazis See Offer as of Little Value.

Action Follows British Mediator's Parley With Henlein.

Special Cable to The Post.

Prague, Aug. 19.—While Czechoslovakia was still wondering tonight what happened yesterday when Lord Runciman talked with the Nazi leader, Konrad Henlein, the Czech government promised the Sudeten Germans six postmasterships, an assistant postmastership, two district governorships, the presidency of a regional court and other jobs in the postal service and railway administration.

This offer gave the impression tonight that the Czechs felt that some definite concessions on their part were necessary if negotiations between them and the Sudeten Germans were to continue. It was made as a demonstration of good will and received the prompt indorsement of Lord Runciman, the British mediator.

But the Nazi Sudetens were not willing to admit that the offer amounted to anything worthwhile.

"Will Take 40 Years."

"Listen," said a Nazi spokesman, "there are 44,000 Czechs working in the civil service in our territory. At this rate it will take them 40 years to settle the problem. If instead of offering us 10 jobs they would offer us 1,000, the tension might be relaxed."

First Conciliatory Step.

Yet this is the first conciliatory step that has been taken by either side since Lord Runciman's arrival. It is possible it was the result of the meeting between Runciman and Henlein.

The Czechs have promised that within the next two weeks they will place Germans as postmasters in the towns of Rodenbach, Asch, Haida, Saaz, Falkanau and Rumburg. It is of interest that Henlein was born and still lives in Asch. They promise an assistant postmastership in Ceske. Other postal positions will be open to Germans in Troppau and Brunn.

Germans will be made district governors at Trautenau and Asch, the second plum for Henlein's home town. A German will be made head of the region court of Eger, where two Sudetens were killed when they tried to cross the frontier in Germany during the May 21 crisis.

But the most important part of the announcement was that the Government promised many other jobs in weeks to come.

Confer With Hodza.

Lord Runciman saw Premier Hodza today and this afternoon there was a meeting of the cabinet. There was no announcement as to what happened during these meet-

Arnold Asks Big Force To 'Police' Monopolies

'What Can You Do With 90 Attorneys?' Trust Buster Asks.

A plea for a strong antitrust enforcement organization, "with regional offices and a personnel sufficient to investigate and prosecute all violations, instead of some of them," last night was voiced by Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, executive member of the monopoly investigating committee.

Arnold told a radio audience there are only 90 attorneys in his antitrust division, and declared, "You can't police a country as large as America with a corporal's guard."

"With such an enforcement organization, antitrust cases must be selected on the basis of their relative importance, while the vast mine-run of offenders is permitted to go their way unmolested," he said.

Asks "Policing Force."

"If we are going to change our policy of crusades to everyday enforcement and actual control, we must have a policing force adequate to accomplish economic results."

Arnold said the Government has "always been just about ready to enforce the antitrust laws" but has never built an organization adequate to "do an actual, practical job." The result, he said, has been only a series of "crusades" and preservation of the "ideal" of competition, while "unrestricted building of empires" was permitted to continue.

"It is my conviction," he said, "that we are being forced to abandon our former policy of easy acquiescence and industrial empire building by the failure of the great

Connecticut New Dealers Urge Purge Of Lonergan

Koppelman's Record Is Better, They Plead, Than Senator's.

George Compares Case to His Own

Says Incumbent Was No More Faithful Than He Was Himself.

By Robert C. Albright.

Eleventh-hour pleas for a "purge" of Senator Lonergan, of Connecticut, have been carried to the President by friends of Lonergan's New Deal opponent, Representative Koppleman.

Cautious after Tuesday's blast aganst Senator Tydings and Representative O'Connor, the White House has promised only "interested co-operation."

This development coincided with a charge by Senator George that the President is inconsistent in his treatment of the Georgia and Connecticut campaigns.

"If President Roosevelt can come into Georgia and ask you to elect any one person as your representative, then it is his duty to go into every State and select the men he wants to come to Congress," George told a Macon, Ga., audience.

George Praises Lonergan.

George said that if Lonergan, "with the same record as mine, in a doubtful New England State, is entitled to the vote of the Administration, then I raise the question that I also am entitled to it."

He called Lonergan "a fine man, who I hope will come back to the Senate."

Koppleman supporters, who have wired and called at the White House, believe indirect aid will not be enough to put over their candidate and are imploring the President to make at least one speech for the man they say is one of his most ardent House satellites.

Cummings, Farley Opposed.

If the President yields, and extends the present four-State purge to include Connecticut, it will be against the advice of Attorney General Cummings, who thinks Lonergan is as good as nominated, and against the wishes of Postmaster General Farley, Lonergan's friend.

As a compromise, Koppleman forces now are seeking a Roosevelt audience for their candidate at Hyde Park, after which Koppleman would presumably make a statement to the press. They also are hoping for a letter to a prominent Bristol resident stating that the President would be pleased to see Koppleman in the Senate.

They have argued at the White

British Vessel Bombed, Sunk By Insurgents

Second Ship Escapes; 20 Die as Planes Raid Barcelona.

By the United Press.

Barcelona, Aug. 19.—The British merchant ship Stanbrook was bombed and sunk by insurgent planes today and another British vessel, owned by the same company, was attacked when Barcelona suffered its heaviest air raids in months with at least 20 dead.

The 1,383-ton Stanbrook, her decks and sides scarred by two previous aerial attacks, sank in Vallcarca Harbor, slightly south of Barcelona on the Mediterranean, after an unsuccessful attempt to beach her.

The new attacks on the British ships came only a few days after Gen. Franco, replying to sharp British protests, agreed to an investigation of the bombings of British vessels and a scheme of indemnity.

The 2,600-ton steamer Stanforth, en route from Barcelona to Oran, Algeria, without cargo, was bombed without damage.

It was the worst air raid in two months on the Spanish loyalist capital and, for the first time, the rebel raiders swept low over the streets and bombed with uncanny accuracy.

Franco Plans New Push.

Hendaye, France, Aug. 19 (AP).—Gen. Franco today shifted his insurgent legions for a new general offensive to bring the two-year-old Spanish civil war to a close before winter.

The preparatory maneuvers were accompanied by a new fury of aerial bombardments along the eastern coast in which British shipping suffered heavily. The actual war fronts were comparatively quiet.

Franco ordered his share of the French-Spanish frontier closed to

British Protest Agent's Arrest By Nazi Police

Halifax Takes Charge of Case; Reprisal by Reich Seen.

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 19.—The British government tonight lodged a sharp protest in Berlin demanding a "full and speedy explanation" of the arrest of Capt. Thomas J. Kendrick, British passport officer in Vienna, whose imprisonment was suspected of being a Nazi reprisal.

The foreign office's spokesman admitted that Kendrick, who is held by the German secret police in Vienna, assisted many Jewish and other refugees to leave Austria after the German "anschluss."

The British protest, serving to heighten European tension at a moment when the government is attempting to bring about a Nazi-Czechoslovak settlement, was delivered to the Berlin government by Ambassador Sir Neville Henderson.

Berlin promised a full inquiry.

Halifax Takes Charge.

Henderson told the German foreign office that Britain "takes an extremely serious view of the arrest of a British government official."

Nazi officials refrained from giving any public explanation for the arrest of Capt. Kendrick, who has been passport control officer of the British Consulate in Vienna for 13 years, as he motored with his wife near Salzburg en route to England for a vacation.

British officials attached grave importance to the incident and Ambassador Henderson's report was rushed by special messenger to Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax. He assumed charge of the case.

Henderson sent a preliminary report to the foreign office last night a few hours after disclosure of

Mercury Starts To Rise Again as District Relaxes

The District continued to relax in resort-like temperatures yesterday as the thermometer contented itself with 85 for the day's high at 3:45 p. m. Low was 64, at 6 a. m.

The climate proved too oppressive, however, for Annabelle Watson, 37, colored, of the 1400 block Fifth street northwest, who collapsed from heat prostration on arrival from New York at Greyhound Bus terminal. She was treated at Emergency Hospital.

Fair skies and slowly rising temperature were forecast for today.

Alexandria Cars Hurt 2 Boys; D. C. Firm Joins Safety Drive

Two children were injured yesterday in Alexandria when they darted out from sidewalks into the path of oncoming traffic.

Edward Tyree, 2, of Lorton, Va., suffered a broken leg when he was hit by a bus in the 900 block of King street after he had left the side of his father, George Tyres, and dodged into the street.

Ellis Lancaster, 37, of the first block of Mason avenue, Alexandria, swerved the bus sharply and struck the boy only a glancing blow with the right, rear fender. He was treated at Alexandria Hospital.

Abrasions on the head were suffered by Louis Haislip, 8, 235 South Feyton street, Alexandria, when he ran in front of a car driven by Ollie Harlow, of Ruckersville, Va. The driver was not held. Young Haislip was sent home after receiving first aid at Alexandria Hospital.

Meanwhile, in Washington, another concern enrolled under The Washington Post-Junior Board of Commerce permanent safety banner, as Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen announced approval of the accident prevention recommendations submitted by his special citizens advisory committee.

Operating a small fleet of light delivery trucks, George F. Muth & Co., 710 Thirteenth street northwest, agreed to foster a continuing safety plan among company drivers.

In approving recommendations of his advisory committee, submitted yesterday by Brig. Gen. Albert Cox, chairman, Hazen said he would immediately order the police department to rigidly enforce regulations governing the right-of-way of pedestrians.

Scratch Causes Boy's Death of Rare Infection

A scooter ride taken two weeks ago yesterday proved fatal to Franklin Lewis, 7-year-old only son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Lewis, 2626 Fourth street northeast, who died in Sibley Hospital of a blood disease.

For several days Franklin thought nothing of a minute scratch on his heel, picked up on the scooter ride, but last week he was put to bed at home, and on Saturday, as infection spread through his body, he was taken to Sibley Hospital.

Diagnosing his ailment as a rare and violent form of streptococcic infection, doctors found a man who had recovered from the same disease and administered blood transfusions to the weakened lad, but the treatment did not check the malady's course.

Coughlin, Former Foe of O'Connor, Hopes He's Victor

New York, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit priest who two years ago was the object of Representative O'Connor's threat to kick him from the Capitol to the White House, today aligned himself politically with O'Connor.

Coughlin, who had urged his followers to line up 12 votes each against O'Connor, expressed the hope that the Congressman would win against President Roosevelt's effort to retire him to private life.

The priest at first brushed aside intimations he ever had been in conflict with O'Connor. Eventually, he remarked that the Congressman has "learned a great deal since then."

U.S. Marine Schools Will Teach Sailing On Romantic Ships

Plans to give American seamen who enter the projected new Merchant Marine schools the advantage of training under sail were disclosed yesterday by the United States Maritime Commission.

The commission announced it had acquired two famous three-masted, square-rigged ships for use in the new program.

Both ships have had long and romantic careers and have been familiar sights in years past in the harbors of the world. The Tusitala has been purchased from the Marine Liquidating Corporation, of Fall River, Mass., and the Joseph Conrad has been presented to the commission by Huntington Hartford, of New York and Newport, R. I.

Both ships will be stationed, temporarily at least, at Hoffman's Island, New York Harbor.

No Stateroom on Ship, So He Swims Ashore

New York, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Joseph Charlton, 31, of San Marcos, Calif., failed to get sleeping accommodations on the Comet, en route tonight from New York to Providence, R. I. The master of the ship said he could sleep on deck, but refused to turn back and let him off. So Charlton jumped off the boat and swam to shore.

WPA Theater Run by Reds, Inquiry Told

Dies Committee Witness Testifies Communists Hold Key Jobs.

By the United Press.

Charges that taxpayers' money is being spent to further communism within Federal theater projects were made yesterday before the House Committee investigating un-American activities shortly after the group asked the Department of Justice to inquire into alleged illegal recruiting of Americans for the Spanish war.

Hazel Huffman, secretary of a New York organization for actors on relief, testified that Federal theater projects sponsored by the Works Progress Administration are dominated by the Workers Alliance which, she said, is Communist-controlled. She also asserted that discrimination is being practiced against needy non-members.

Recruiting Inquiry Ordered.

Her testimony came after the committee unanimously approved a resolution by Representative Mosier (Democrat), Ohio, asking Attorney General Cummings to investigate Spanish recruiting practices in the United States on the basis of statements by two Boston youths, Abraham Sobel and Alvin Halpern.

They testified Communists lured them into enlisting with the Spanish loyalist forces, that they had managed to escape from the front with great difficulty, and that there are between 1,700 and 4,000 Americans still there in "suicide brigades" as "virtual prisoners."

Halpern told the committee that two members of Congress, Representatives O'Connell (Democrat), Montana, and Bernard (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, addressed a group of wounded in a Spanish hos-

Legion Chief For Maryland Blasts Purge

Move to Oust Tydings, Says Bair, Shows Roosevelt Seeks Dictatorship.

By Edward T. Folliard
A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Aug. 19.—Bruce T. Bair, retiring commander of the American Legion in Maryland, today charged President Roosevelt's invasion of Maryland to defeat Senator Tydings was a move toward "dictatorship."

Bair loosed his broadside while making his report to the twentieth annual convention of the Legion in the Free State.

From the camp of Representative Lewis, Tydings' New Deal opponent in the Democratic primary race, came a reply which charged that Bair had "embroiled the Legion in partisan politics" and had therefore "flagrantly violated" the Legion's constitution.

Tydings in Parade.

Tydings tonight marched in the Legion parade past City Hall, a jaunty overseas cap having taken the place of his campaign straw. A twice-decorated veteran, who rose from private to lieutenant colonel in the crack Twenty-ninth Division, Tydings was in line with the Joseph L. Davis Post, of Havre de Grace, of which he was once commander.

Blonde, attractive Mrs. Tydings, daughter of Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Russia, marched with the Legion Auxiliary.

Commander Bair, in addressing the delegates in today's session at the Lord Baltimore Hotel, told of the Legion's fight against President Roosevelt's reorganization bill, a measure which Tydings opposed in the Senate.

"We opposed this bill," Bair said, because it would permit the President to establish a virtual dictator-

Seagull Steve Is 'Frustrated' As Rubber Ball Fails to Hatch

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cambridge, England, Aug. 19.—The British Association for the Advancement of Science learned at its annual convention today the gull is gullible, indeed.

The seagull, F. B. Kirkman reported to the psychological section, will try to hatch anything, except a cricket ball, which was too large for the bird to sit upon. For instance, said Kirkman, who is a London ornithologist of note, a certain gull named Steve sat on a small rubber ball for 22 days.

Steve then gave up, Kirkman said, when no little gull emerged from the ball. The Steve showed unmistakable signs of frustration. The idea of playing this trick on poor Steve, Kirkman explained, was to get the low down on depressed emotions.

Other gulls on Kirkman's stag, names not reported to the association, sat from four and a half to 22 days on such objects on cotton reels, golf balls and camphor balls. These also failed to hatch and the sitters exhibited frustration just as Steve did.

With all the regret of a true Briton, Kirkman reported:

"One bird would not accept a cricket ball. It tried to. There was no lack of enthusiasm and it made a most heroic effort but only succeeded in rolling off on the other side."

A report presented by Prof. W. E. Le Gros Clark and Dr. G. M. Morant, of Oxford University, based on discovery of the famous Swanscombe skull in England, indicated "Englishmen" of a quarter-million years ago "could hardly have differed markedly from modern man." So doubtless they would have felt bad about the cricket ball, too.

Senator Pope Seen on Ticket Of La Follettes

White House Left-Wingers Urge Idahoan to Run Despite Defeat.

Strong possibility was seen yesterday that New Deal Senator Pope, of Idaho, defeated in his State Senatorial primary by a conservative Democrat, may run independently for the Senate with active encouragement of left-wing White House political advisers.

It was disclosed by a responsible New Deal source that Senator Pope, back in Washington, had received word from White House intimates that he would get New Deal backing if he should step out independently and oppose not only the Republican but the regular Democratic Senatorial nominee in Idaho.

This would carry to new lengths the Administration opposition to conservative Democrats party and conservative Democrats in the party and might well precipitate a behind-the-scenes break between James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and the New Deal advisers whom he calls "amateur politicians."

On La Follette Ticket.

If Senator Pope runs independently he will go on the ballot under an available designation label of the National Progressive Party, organ of the La Follette brothers. Thus to a La Follette candidate in Idaho would be accorded substantial administration support as against a Democratic nominee, while in Wisconsin the Administration would be giving a pat on the back to Senator Duffy, a Democrat, as against a probable La Follette candidate there.

Postmaster General Farley already has congratulated and pledged support to the conservative victor in Idaho's Democratic primary, Representative Clark. In the primary, August 9, Clark, who declared he was no Administration "yes man" and had opposed several major New Deal measures, won by something more than 3,000 votes. Before the primary Farley and, indirectly, Secretary of State Hull had gone to the assistance of Senator Pope.

But three days after the primary Farley telegraphed Clark his "heartiest congratulations." He added, "if I personally or the Democratic National Committee can be of assistance, please feel free to command me."

Farley Can't Switch.

In the face of Farley's acceptance of the primary result, the New Deal left wing has fully adopted Senator Pope's own conclusion that he was beaten only because Republicans in numbers entered the Democratic primary. It is on this basis and on the theory that Clark was not nominated by Democrats that the New Dealers would back Senator Pope as an independent.

After his telegram to Representative Clark it would seem to be impossible, however, for Farley to take a different stand, and he probably would not care to do so anyhow.

Harry Hopkins, WPA Administrator; Thomas Corcoran, White House handy man; Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Assistant Attorney General Keenan, Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, and Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, are reported to be members of groups from which the new support for Senator Pope emanates.

German Press Likens Hitler To the Kaiser

Special Cable to The Post.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—With Europe still deeply concerned by the grim military preparations in the Nazi Reich, the German press published today photographs from 1913 and 1938, which call attention to the role of Adolf Hitler as the new supreme war lord, the successor of Kaiser Wilhelm II. The pictures from 1913 show Wilhelm on the field observing the last great German maneuvers before the World War. Those from the current year show Hitler watching the first stages of the war games which are being staged on a scale not approached since 1913.

It is significant to note that never before since the Nazis assumed power has the German press called attention in this manner to the parallel between the position of the Hohenzollern monarch and the Nazi dictator as supreme commanders in succession of their country's fighting forces.

The photographs of the maneuvers which, with reserve divisions participating, are now getting under way, appeared on the front page of the Voelkischer Beobachter. In two pictures Hitler, in the company of high officers, is shown watching the field operations near Doeberitz training center, west of Berlin.

The Nazi commander-in-chief stands in a central position, with one foot forward, his hands clasped before him. Conspicuous on the band of his visored military cap are the traditional branching laurel leaves won by all officers of the German army. The Feuhrer has affected the laurel leaves insignia only from the time of his entry into Vienna.

It is in the "Berliner Illustrierte Zeitung" which today displays two more pages of pictures of the great Kaiser maneuvers of 1913. Conspicuous in the photograph is one of Wilhelm standing alone in the field except for three trumpeters at the rear, who are blowing the call to "cease firing." Like Hitler, the Kaiser stands with one foot forward.

In view of the current developments in the Reich, the text below is more significant than any feature of this picture itself. It reads: "The photographer probably had as little idea as the Kaiser that this would prove a historic picture, that the Kaiser was seeing his proud army in action for the last time before its great test."

Maryland Tobacco Growers Unite In Struggle Against Fixed Market

Farmers Accuse Buyers of Setting Prices by Collusion.

An unexpected drop in demand and prices for Maryland tobacco this season has placed the 5,600 farmers of the five southern Maryland counties in a precarious predicament. Following a year of plenty—the '36 crop, sold last year, brought a record return—hundreds of growers are now faced with scarcity because tobacco prices have been cut in half.

The '37 crop, admittedly a poor one, is bringing in lowest prices since before the war, and the worst of it is that the market is still glutted with the poorer grades of the Maryland leaf.

Foreign Outlets Dwindling.

Maryland tobacco, which has fine burning qualities, makes up only a small percentage of the grades used in cigarettes. The domestic demand is small. Major outlet for the product has been in foreign exports, but European nations have of late been growing their own crop.

Baltimore buyers insist that this year's crop is only half as good as last year's, and so worth only half the price. But planters and Extension Service officials say this is not so; that the price is far too low.

The situation is acute, and that's why the farmers of Prince Georges, Charles, St. Marys, Calvert and Anne Arundel counties, after many years of aimless criticism, are finally uniting in a mass movement to gain control over the sale of their tobacco in the belief that the reform will give them a better price.

Buyers Compact Group.

The entire Maryland tobacco crop is sold in Baltimore through either commission houses or the Tobacco Growers Association. Secret bids are made by the buyers, who are independents or agents for the big manufacturers of smoking tobacco—but there are only six or seven buyers. Prices fluctuate according to the bids of these few buyers.

This year there has been little difference in the bids. Among the farmers have arisen rumors and charges of price fixing or price agreement as cause of the drastic cut in the sales value of the tobacco this year. Bitter complaints from many farmers and tenants, who discovered their crop would not even return the cost of production, have resulted in initial co-operative action by the five counties.

Acting through the strongly organized farm bureaus—over 90 per cent of the five-county farmers grow tobacco for their cash crop—the growers have named an intercounty committee to investigate the possibility of price collusion and to fix more equitable means of marketing the leaf.

Headed by Bergen Brown, of La Plata, secretary of Charles County Farm Bureau, the committee includes Harry Townshend, of Mitchellsville, and William E. Duvall, of Naylor, for Prince Georges; Samuel C. Linton, of Riverside, and F. Brooke Matthews, of La Plata, for Charles; Upton Thompson, of Hollywood, and Grembille Lewis, of Drayden, for St. Marys; Oden A. Sansburg, of Friendship, and W. P. Harrison, of Annapolis, for Anne Arundel. Calvert is to name its representatives this week.

System of Sales.

Under the present system of marketing, the Maryland tobacco crop—very little changed from the methods of Colonial days—the tobacco is sorted, packed into hogsheads weighing about 700 pounds each, and shipped by truck, rail or boat to Baltimore. The farmer or tenant sends the crop himself or through a transfer buyer. The hogsheads are then offered for sale through the Tobacco Growers Association, co-operative, or through commission houses.

After being stored for 14 days, the hogsheads are opened by a State sampler who selects six bundles of the leaf. These bundles serve as the samples on which secret bids are made by the buyers.

"Actually," Brown explained, "the farmers are not selling their crop; it is only being bought, and by a handful of men. And when it is realized that the buyers, commission houses and tobacco association will deal only with each other, it becomes apparent that the farmers have little to say as to what price the tobacco should bring."

Last year the various types of tobacco leaf averaged 20 to 21 cents per pound, reaching a top of 56 cents for the finest quality. This year—the 1937 crop is now being sold—the average has already fallen to 10-11 cents, and is likely to drop further inasmuch as only the best half of the crop has been purchased. Top price has been but 40 cents, with low expected at 2 to 3 cents per pound.

Drop Held Too Great.

The farmers can see no logical reason for the drastic reduction in price. They admit that the crop this year is of poorer quality than that sold last year, due to mold, hornworm and bad curing season, but they insist that the drop is much too great, and they point out that the 1936 crop—sold last year—was one of the best in the past century; that the leaf they are now selling is not greatly below par.

The farmers can't understand it. That is why one hears mutterings of "price fixing." The low price came to them as a sudden shock—a shock to be endured at least until the next crop is sold.

Brown tells of one farmer who received a net return of $42.65 for four hogsheads of tobacco, 2,000 pounds. The crop cost him $400 to raise. Last year's prices on a similar output gave him a profit of $400. The Farm Bureau secretary tells of a second planter who received but $199 for five-acre crop, raised at a cost of $100 per acre. He has dozens of such cases in his records.

$105 for Year's Return.

Townshend, member of the inquiry committee, operates a 1,000-acre farm at Mitchellsville. In a normal year he expects a return of $2,000, "or you might as well give up farming." This year he will receive a net of $105.

He rents out the land to three families on shares. The farm, then, must be able to support 30 persons, including the four families and the seven hired by the tenants.

One of the sharecroppers, J. W. White, who has seven mouths to feed, must hire three laborers to help him in the fields, at a cost of $1,200 for the year. He used five tons of fertilizer at $37 a ton. Since half the cost of the fertilizer is paid for by Townshend, this cost ran into $92.50. Limiting his cost to these two items, and not including payment for his own labor, the crop was produced for $1,292.

White raised 10,030 pounds of tobacco, half of which he paid to Townshend. For his own share of 5,015 pounds he received about 10 cents a pound, actually $507. Thus he lost $785 on his year of labor. Last year on a similar crop White earned $1,575. The other two tenants suffered proportionate losses.

Townshend showed how his yearly costs—county and State taxes, insurance, share of fertilizer cost, property upkeep, improvement, seeds—left him but $105. He then said: "That is why the farmers must somehow get organized, win control over their own crops on the selling market and get a fair return. We will all go broke if this goes on."

Plan Tax-Reduction Drive.

The intercounty committee plans to attack the crop price level from another direction, too, according to Secretary Brown. A national crusade will be undertaken, under leadership of Maryland growers, for reduction of Federal taxes on tobacco.

Brown pointed out that for every dollar collected for his tobacco by the growers the Federal Government collects $2.50 in taxes. Thus on the package of cigarettes that sells for 12½ cents, the Government takes 6½ cents, leaving only 6 cents to be divided up by the grower, distributor, manufacturer and retailer.

"The farmers feel," Brown declared, "that if the taxes were not so prohibitive, especially on cigarettes, the manufacturer would be willing to pay more for the leaf."

County Auctions Proposed.

The committee will thoroughly investigate the marketing setup, and the possibilities of establishing county marts, instead of those in Baltimore, or of inaugurating the open auctioning methods used in other tobacco States.

A second trial for official Government grades will be considered. The Federal system of grading was tried in 1934, but, according to Brown, met with such opposition on part of the buyers and commission houses, that the policy was dropped.

Shady practices on part of the farmers will also come within the purview of the committee. Buyers have long complained that unscrupulous growers not only fill the center of the hogshead with low-grade leaf, but even with wood, sand and stones. Though black-listed by the buyers, the chiselers continue selling through other farmers.

Over-sampling, in favor of the farmer, is also charged by the purchasers. It is asserted that the State samplers sometimes pluck inferior tobacco leaves from the sample of the hogshead.

Distress Expected.

Dr. T. B. Symons, director of Extension Service, a farmer-aid bureau sponsored by the University of Maryland and the Department of Agriculture, also believes that current tobacco prices "are not as good as they ought to be." He feels it is the low price for top grade tobaccos which hurts the farmers most.

"In the past, due to differences in ideas of grading and selling it has been difficult to organize the farmers and sharecroppers to reform their production and marketing methods," Symons said.

Extension service tobacco specialists feel, inasmuch as the demand for Maryland tobacco must increase with the current growth in demand for cigarettes, that the price this year is much too low.

Dr. Symons believes that the farm credit system is strong in the five counties, and that the farmers will be able to stand the shock of deflated values despite the tremendous drain on their resources. Brown sees great distress ahead for the merchants who must supply farmers, and growers who must aid tenants. He expects triple the number of applicants with Farm Security Corporation for loans.

In Charles County the possibility of getting a commodity loan from the United States in order to hold back the present tobacco until higher prices are available is being considered. W. R. C. Connick, president of Prince Georges Farm Bureau, foresees an increase in the small number of farmers now getting relief.

Extension Service has for years been trying to organize the farmers to reform their conditions. Dr. Symons pointed out that if the tobacco farmers would grow more food and feed, there would be less distress in periods of bad prices.

The Maryland counties produce an average of 30,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year, at an income of from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000.

The Maryland tobacco is known as "Maryland Leaf" or "Maryland Export." France, which has recently renewed its buying of the Maryland low grades, calls it "Maryland Scaferlati." Maryland tobacco is an air-cured type, light in body and color, with good combustion qualities. France, Germany and The Netherlands were formerly large buyers of the tobacco.

Historically, William Claiborne and associates, who emigrated from Virginia, are believed to be the first tobacco planters in Maryland, at Kent Island, in 1631. In 1732 the State Assembly made tobacco legal tender for the payment of debts and salaries of officials.

Until the twentieth century practically all Maryland tobacco was exported, but recently it is more and more being used in domestic brands of cigarettes.

In a survey made in 1935 by Ray Hurley and S. H. DeVault, of the extension staff, several recommendations were made for the farmers, all directly or indirectly leading to obtaining a higher price for the leaf.

The report urged production of only the higher grade tobaccos; more efficient use of tobacco seed; more care in stripping and sorting; barring mouldy and low grades from the market; establishment of more local co-operative packing houses; improved sampling; application of grading system; encouragement of more sales competition in Baltimore, and reciprocal trade treaties by United States to allow increase of tobacco export.

Bair, Legion Chief, Hits Purge Of Tydings as 'Dictatorship'

Folliard

ship with reference to the Civil Service Commission, the Veterans' Administration, and so forth, which we felt is contrary to the American idea of government."

Warn's of "Dictatorship."

"The President wants to make the Supreme Court subsurvient to his will, and now is coming into Maryland for the purpose of trying to defeat Senator Tydings, who certainly has fought our fight in the Senate this year.

"This will make the American Government a dictatorship if the President is successful, for it will destroy the independence of the three branches of the Government and make the President boss over the legislative as well as the judicial departments."

About the time that the Legion parade was getting underway and the bands were whooping up "Over There," "Tipperary" and other favorites of 1917-18, Owen Ryan, of Chevy Chase, a member of both the Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, went on the radio for the Lewis camp to denounce Bair's speech.

Ryan Assails Bair.

After criticizing previous efforts of Commander Bair to use the Legion in Tydings' behalf, Ryan said:

"And now Bair has openly and completely embroiled the Legion in partisan politics. In his annual report read today in convention assembled, he attacked President Roosevelt and urged the election of Senator Tydings.

"This is in flagrant violation of the Legion constitution, article 2, section 2, which reads:

"The American Legion, Department of Maryland, shall be absolutely nonpolitical and shall not be used for the dissemination of partisan principles nor for the promotion of the candidacy of any person seeking public office or preferment.'

"I for one, as a member of the American Legion, regret most sincerely to see it dragged into partisan politics by no less a person than its own State commander. I am hopeful that the Legion will keep its good name inviolate and take appropriate action against Department Commander Bair, who has so completely lost his head."

Mulliken Speaks.

Kent Mulliken, campaign manager fro Lewis and a member of the Laurel Post of the Legion, said tonight he had turned down a chance to be a delegate to the convention here because of his political position.

He charged that Bair's speech was "indefensible, inexcusable, a case of hitting below the belt, after the bell had rung." He added that Bair would leave office under "a cloud of shame."

Ryan, whose speech praised Lewis for having "done more for us and our families through his great record of social legislation than any other member of Congress," said the "brass hat brain trust" included:

Jack Clarke, a contractor in Baltimore "and not obviously Representative of the great group of hard working veterans throughout the State."

James B. Fitzgerald, vice commander of the southern Maryland division of the legion who he said "is a lobbyist for the motion picture industry so it is obvious why he is organizing veterans for Senator Tydings."

Richard O'Connell, a member of the city council of Baltimore.

Tydings To Talk Sunday.

Some legion members, interviewed in the lobby of the Lord Baltimore, expressed regret that Commander Bair had struck a political note in his report. They said they were pro-Tydings men, too.

There were others who insisted that Bair, in warning against Roosevelt's move toward a dictatorship by invading this State in a primary fight, considered that the was making, not a political, but a patriotic speech.

Meanwhile the Tydings headquarters today arranged an elaborate hook-up for the Senator's radio speech on Sunday night on "recent developments" thereby removing all doubt as the the nature of it. Definitely it will be a reply to President Roosevelt's "purge" announcement last Tuesday when he accused Tydings of having "betrayed" the New Deal.

Morgan Incited By Resentment, Says Lilienthal

Ousted TVA Chief Was Angry at President, He Tells Inquiry.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 19.—TVA Director David E. Lilienthal charged today the Congressional investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority was obtained "through false pretenses."

A few minutes before he had told the committee the investigation was forced by charges made by Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, ousted TVA chairman.

Lilienthal ripped open the old TVA feud by charging the former chairman with "vindictive resentment" and trying to embarrass President Roosevelt in his 1936 campaign because he had reappointed Lilienthal as a TVA director, and refused Morgan the power of veto.

The day's session was the liveliest since the hearings opened five weeks ago.

Jenkins Is Hissed.

At one point spectators hissed Representative Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, when he said he saw no reason to change a statement he made on the floor of Congress that "the TVA is a stench in the nostrils of the people."

Jenkins invited whoever hissed "to meet me outside." When Committee Counsel Francis Biddle told him he was hissed by women, Jenkins said, "I guess my invitation doesn't apply."

Lilienthal hinted broadly at a possible libel suit against Dr. Morgan, after saying the deposed chairman had charged him with personal corruption.

As Jenkins questioned him about "personal corruption," Lilienthal said: "Civil liability is involved here and I don't want to waive anything."

Later when Jenkins remarked, "I find no place where he (Arthur Morgan) charged you with personal corruption," Lilienthal said: "A jury in Knox County may take a different view." After the hearing Lilienthal told reporters he planned no immediate action.

Questions Good Motives.

Lilienthal did not elaborate on his statement the TVA investigation had been obtained "through false pretenses."

Referring to Arthur Morgan's relations with President Roosevelt, Lilienthal said Dr. Morgan indicated his resentment to the President May 20, 1936, but added he thought it "improper" to say what went between the President and Morgan.

The witnesses questioned Dr. Morgan's "good motives" in wanting to have the marble claims of Senator Berry (Democrat), Tennessee, called before the President, adding it "might have been a move to bother and embarrass the President."

Moseley Lauds Defense Plans For Southland

Says Maneuvers Show Large Army Could Be Raised Quickly.

By the Associated Press.

Camp Bullis, Tex., Aug. 19.—Maj. Gen. George Van Horn Mosley, commander of the United States Third Army, said today maneuvers held in Texas and Mississippi had proved America could mobilize a sizable army for defense of its southern borders within a few hours.

The general, whose command extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the eastern border of California, was here to witness maneuvers of Texas, Oklahoma, Arizona and New Mexico National Guardsmen and regular troops.

"The problem in Mississippi and in Texas," said the general, "has demonstrated conclusively that we can concentrate over our southern terrain and coastal borders a sizable army in a few hours. We handled 27,000 troops in Mississippi a few days ago and 26,000 in Texas as this maneuver. If need be, we could muster them all into service at any point without serious difficulty."

The general said he believed the National Guard in the United States had been improved vastly since the World War.

The No. 1 problem facing the United States today from a military standpoint is its man power, the general asserted. He said America's man power today is "the worst in history."

"There are five reasons for this," Gen. Moseley said. "They are in this order: Graft, crime, health, illiteracy and veneral diseases.

"A means of correcting these evils is the No. 1 problem of this country."

'Rough Rider' Rides Again

A bit rough but still a rider, Veteran O. Hasert gets astride a horse—with the help of Veteran C. W. The celebration was at Montauk, Long Island, with veterans who'd served under the late Teddy Roosevelt in attendance. O. Hasert was with Eleventh Cavalry.

Roosevelt Is Urged to Purge Sen. Lonergan in Connecticut

Lonergan

House that Lonergan's New Deal voting record is no better than Senator George's, and the President has aided men less loyal than Koppleman. Lonergan, blacklisted by Labor's Non-Partisan League, voted 24 times last session with the Administration and 20 times against it. Koppleman has voted regularly with the President on all issues except military expenditures and neutrality.

The Koppleman plea is first of expected wide pressure on the President to extend his "elimination" program to include other States under his new policy of interference in primaries when New Deal issues are at stake. The President is almost certain to return to South Carolina for a more direct thrust at Senator Smith, fighting two New Dealers for the nomination.

Meanwhile, repercussions from the Georgia purge continued from Washington and Atlanta. Edgar B. Dunlap, removed as Georgia counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for campaign activity for Senator George, charged that "powerful forces' 'outside the RFC forced his resignation. George told Georgia voters, "If all you want is a smooth-running machine, absolute monarchy is the best yet devised." He said there was "no half-way house between democracy and despotism."

In Washington, Chairman Sheppard, of the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee, said that only if official charges were made would committee investigators look into complaints by George that assistants to United States District Attorney Lawrence S. Camp were politically active in Camp's campaign. The President, at Barnesville, Ga., supported Camp to win over George.

Camp Points to "Pressure."

Dunlap told Georgia voters that Camp reported his activities for George to Dr. C. H. Foreman, advisor to Secretary of Interior Ickes on inter-racial affairs, and Foreman protested to the RFC.

"They promptly informed him that I was not under civil service regulations and further that I was not even an employe of the RFC, but was on a retainer basis—that the RFC was merely a client of mine, and, of course, they had no control over my politics," said Dunlap.

"It is very evident that the pressure on the RFC to purge me continued from other and more powerful sources until finally on yesterday they liquidated me."

Earle Fund Report Vague.

The successful Earle-Jones ticket in Pennsylvania meantime reported to the Sheppard committee that it was impossible to determine what part of the more than $222,000 spent for the ticket went for the Democratic candidacy of Gov. Earle.

Previously, the unsuccessful Democratic faction headed by S. Davis Wilson and Thomas Kennedy said it could not break down the more than $350,000 spent in its campaign. Sheppard, who has demanded a breakdown in behalf of each candidate, said he was "determined to get the facts."

Some resentment was apparent in the ranks of Koppleman forces at the disinclination of President Roosevelt definitely to oppose Lonergan. Koppleman sought an interview with the President before his Western tour, but was unable to reach Mr. Roosevelt personally. Two days before, Attorney General Cummings had advised the President Lonergan was certain to be nominated.

Most recent request for Roosevelt intervention for Koppleman and against Lonergan was made by James J. Butler, New Britain Democrat, now doing news work in Washington.

Butler said he merely served as a messenger to deliver to the White House material dealing with the Connecticut situation. But he said he had been assured "interested co-operation" would be accorded Koppleman and that Attorney General Cummings had not spoken for the White House in indorsing Lonergan.

Butler said a "comparison of the Congressional records of Senator Lonergan and Representative Koppleman, with references to their support of the Roosevelt Administration, has been made at the White House, and the attitude of political and labor groups, and rank-and-file voters on the two leading candidates is now being weighed."

Until the President's Tuesday defense of White House interference in primaries, likelihood that Mr. Roosevelt would exert any strong influence in the Connecticut situation had been steadily waning. Even close Koppleman supporters doubt that in any event he will take so strong a stand as he did in Georgia, Maryland or New York.

Trend Favors Lonergan.

One plea for aid received at the White House was a wire from Dr. M. F. Claffey, of Bristol, who wired the President asking direct support for Koppleman. It was possible the President might extend "indirect co-operation" in a letter replying to Dr. Claffey.

With the trend strongly in favor of Lonergan, who has the backing of the Maloney-Smith-Fitzgerald machine, and has campaigned vigorously throughout the State, observers felt that even forthright intervention by the President could not save Koppleman. Like George, Smith and Tydings, Lonergan tells Connecticut voters he is loyal to the New Deal but reserves the native right to disagree with the President on details.

Chief hopes of the Koppleman forces lie in large uninstructed delegates to be sent to the State convention by Hartford, Bridgeport and New Britain, representing about one-third the State's voting strength. They argue that a strong statement by the President would swing the delegation.

But the President is plainly wary. This time he may follow Farley's advice not to "stick his neck out" for a candidate likely to be licked.

Monopoly

Eyes on Efficiency.

Arnold denied there is any purpose to break up large businesses into small ones "regardless of their efficiency."

"This is neither the ideal nor the policy of the Sherman act," he said, "nor should it be the ideal of future antimonopoly legislation.

"No government group that I know of desires to break up efficient mass production. We only desire to condemn combinations going beyond efficient mass production which have become instruments arbitrarily affixing inflexible prices or exercising coercive power."

He said failure to provide adequate antitrust law enforcement was "gradually changing this country into an industrial autocracy," and declared the problem is "how to unleash the productive forces without taking the short and easy road to industrial autocracy."

"Fight Without a Referee."

"The competitive struggle without effective antitrust enforcement is like a fight without a referee," he said. "This situation will not be solved by hanging mottoes of fair play on the four posts of the ring. The trouble has been that, due to inadequate policing, the referee has been absent in most sections of American industry."

"We should not blame great industrial organizers. In a hard played game, an aggressive team will go as far as the imposition of penalities permits or else it will lose to the team which does."

Arnold said that in Theodore Roosevelt's famous trust-busting campaign there were only five lawyers and four stenographers in the anti-trust division. From 1914 to 1923 there averaged only 18 attorneys in the division, and there were only 15 lawyers there when this Administration took office, he said.

Points to Other Staffs.

He compared the present personnel of 90 with the 1,200 employes of the Maritime Commission and the 2,800 employes of the new Civil Aeronautics Authority, declaring the functions of neither of these approach in extent the problem of anti-trust law enforcement. As a closer illustration, he cited the 1,200 personnel of the Securities and Exchange Commission, with its eight regional offices, and asked what the SEC could accomplish with a staff of 90.

Arnold said the economic structure consists of two worlds; "the first is a world of organized industry and the second is a world of small unorganized business, farmers, laborers and consumers." He declared "the government is stepping into the breach today to provide the second or competitive world with more purchasing power."

He charged a number of groups have obtained control of "economic toll bridges which enable them to impose charges on others who have to pass over them to buy or sell their goods."

Names "Toll Bridges."

He said the "patent toll bridge" operates as "a source of arbitrary power in the hands of those who never invented anything;" and in another field "the existence of the independent oil companies of America is threatened because the major oil companies stand between them and access to the market."

"Congress might well consider that the marketing of gasoline has become a public utility," he said. "If independents could sell gasoline direct to the public, I am convinced they would have no difficulty in competing."

Arnold called another type of "toll bridge" the refusal of the American Medical Association "to allow a patient to be admitted to a hospital unless he is attended by a member of that association."

He charged the association with preventing "qualified physicians from practicing their profession in hospitals because they disagree with their social views as to the best method of furnishing medical care to the poor."

3 Independents File for Office In Montgomery

Mrs. Marguerite Fischer Seeks Nomination for House of Delegates.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone SHepherd 4200.

Three independent Democrats filed for office yesterday with the supervisors of election at Rockville. They are Mrs. Marguerite Fischer, of Chevy Chase, filing for Democratic nomination to House of Delegates; Harry Hoskinson, of Germantown, and William Fitzgerald, of Silver Spring, for Democratic State Central Committee.

In announcing her candidacy, Mrs. Fischer said: "I do so at the request of my many friends. If nominated and elected, I expect to do everything in my power to assure to the women of this State the equal rights provided in the Constitution of the State of Maryland. I will at all times permit and encourage my constituents the privilege of being heard on all bills pending before the Legislature of this State."

Mrs. Fischer is president of the Women's Democratic Club of Montgomery County and the Woman's Democratic Club of Leland, and is a member of the board of governors of the United Women's Democratic Clubs of Maryland. She also is a past vice president of the Montgomery County League of Women Voters and a member of the Montgomery County Social Welfare Council.

Fitzgerald has been a resident of Montgomery County for 20 years and is engaged in the contracting business. He saw service in the World War with communications division.

Hoskinson, who is a former vice president of the Sanitary Grocery Co., operates several farms in the Germantown area.

Eugene J. Casey, of Gaithersburg, who resigned Thursday as chairman of the independent Democratic faction, yesterday issued the following statement:

"I have resigned as cochairman of the Montgomery County independent Democratic movement and have appointed Judge Donald A. De Lashmutt, of Rockville, as temporary cochairman pending the election of a permanent cochairman.

At our initial organization meeting a resolution was adopted prohibiting the indorsement of any State-wide candidates.

"Therefore, I believe it is impossible for me to continue as leader of the independent movement that is supporting no State-wide candidate, while at the same time I am director of publicity for Representative David J. Lewis, a candidate for the Democratic Senatorial nomination.

"My official connection with the campaign of Mr. Lewis, I believe, has created a situation in the minds of many of the independents that seems to be untenable and inconsistent and at the same time has caused a misunderstanding in some quarters among Montgomery County Democrats interested in the welfare of Mr. Lewis.

"I have been closely affiliated with Mr. Lewis' campaign from its inception and will continue to give my entire time and work wholeheartedly in his behalf.

"I, too, will continue to support the independent Democratic candidates as an individual with the expectation that they will hold good to their promises not to indorse any State-wide candidates and to support Democratic nominees, without equivocation, in the November election."

Political observers said resignation of Casey paves the way for supporters of Herbert R. O'Conor, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, to seize control and secure indorsement of their candidate. It is possible that the group also might indorse Senator Millard E. Tydings if the ban against support of State candidacies adopted at the organization meeting is lifted. This would be in line with the belief of many O'Conor supporters that such a move would be of assistance to his candidacy in Montgomery County.

John Gassoway, Rockville attorney, is temporary recording secretary in the vacancy caused by resignation of J. Somervell Dawson, of Rockville.

The independent faction will inaugurate its campaign with a rally Monday night at Washington Grove auditorium. Monday is the last day for filing candidates for the primaries, which will be held September 12.

Politics will be the paramount topic today at the second annual outing of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Takoma Park, at Breezy Point Beach, Md. Virtually all of the county candidates and most of the candidates for State-wide offices plan to attend.

Arrangements are being made to accommodate a crowd of 2,500 for the all-day affair which will start in the early morning and end with dancing until 2 a. m.

Athletic events, including a softball game between up-county and down-county Democrats, will feature the afternoon. Swimming, fishing, boating, games and "politicking" will round out the day.

Caravans of automobiles bearing the picnickers will leave from Rockville, Bethesda, Silver Spring and Takoma Park, converging at the Bladensburg Peace Cross at 10 a. m.

Forest Glen Council, Knights of Columbus, will hold its fourth annual horse show at the Meadowbrook Saddle Club on the East-West highway on September 24 and 25, it was announced yesterday by Harry Huhn, show committee secretary.

Among trophies to be awarded will be the Howard W. Jackson Challenge Trophy, donated by Mayor Jackson of Baltimore, which will go to the winner of the open jumping class. The Rosensteel Trophy for the winner of the Corinthian class and the K. of C. Challenge Trophy also will be awarded.

Marine Reserve Ends 'War' at Camp Ritchie

Board of Observers Lauds Clear Understanding of D. C. Troops.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Camp Ritchie, Md., Aug. 19.—Commendation for the excellent manner in which the District's Fifth Battalion, Organized Marine Corps Reserve, executed its combat problem today was voiced by the board of observers in the critique of the exercise upon its completion this afternoon.

Addressing the assembled command after the mimic war had been fought through brush and marshes and the objective won, the observers declared the spirit of the reserves, their interest and their clear understanding was equal to that of the regulars. Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, the battalion commander, also praised the personnel.

Members of the board who scrutinized every phase of the behavior of the troops were Lieut. Col. Raphael Griffin and Maj. Eugene F. C. Collier, who were accompanied by the inspector-instructor assigned by headquarters, Maj. George W. McHenry.

An interested spectator was Col. I. P. Penhallow, Army Medical Corps Reserve, of Washington. Col. Penhallow commended the medical detachment under command of Lieut. Comdr. Don S. Knowlton, U. S. Navy Reserve, and the battalion surgeon, for the rapid and efficient manner in which the first-aid stations and field hospitals were placed in operation.

Company F, based at Rockville and winners of the Gene Tunney trophy for athletic sportsmanship, accepted the challenge of Company I, of the 104th Medical Regiment of the Virginia National Guard and champions of their unit, to defend their softball title and trounced the Guardsmen, 4 to 2.

The sheriffs pledged themselves to maintain Virginia's lynchless record of the last several years and adopted a resolution commending State Supervisor of Jail Accounts Russell B. Devine's work in connection with jail reform and pledged him full support.

Work to Begin On Beltsville Laboratories

Relief Labor Will Start Construction of U. S. Research Center.

With preliminary work completed, actual construction will start Monday on a $4,200,000 improvement program at the Beltsville (Md.) National Agriculture Research Center, it was announced yesterday by Earl C. Sanford, superintendent.

The first phase of the program will be construction of three new general purpose laboratories and a cold storage laboratory. The Bureau of Chemistry and Soils and the Food and Drug Administration will use two of the laboratories. It has not been decided what unit of the Agriculture Department will be assigned the other general purpose laboratory.

Relief Funds Used.

Approximately 50 laborers will be put to work Monday, and the force will gradually be increased to about 600 men. The program is being carried out with a $3,300,000 PWA grant and an allocation of $900,000 for employment of relief labor on the projects by the WPA.

Among the improvements to be made is the transfer of the Department of Agriculture greenhouse on Constitution avenue, between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets, to the Beltsville center. This work, however, will not be completed before 15 to 18 months.

The program also includes construction of new barns, improvements to roads and fences and the installation of new facilities at the Patuxent game research refuge.

With an average of 76 cents per fire for 46 alarms, the Riverdale Volunteer Fire Company ranked second. Property endangered in the 46 alarms was evaluated at $17,300. The total loss was estimated at $35.

The total number of alarms answered by the county's 23 volunteer fire companies was 1,266. The total fire loss was $58,072 and the property endangered was valued at $1,214,855. Twenty of the alarms were false.

Nazi Industry Hit as Arming Drains Labor

6,000,000 Women Take Posts; Italy Sends 100,000 Workers.

By The Associated Press.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—While Reichsfuehrer Hitler is hurrying from training ground to training ground to see whether all is in readiness for the autumn divisional meneuvers, Germany's industrialists are hard put to find enough men to keep factories and plants going.

Today Hitler went to the Grossborn training grounds and watched troops of the second army corps from Pommern and Mecklenburg engage in thunderous sham battle.

Later he spent several hours among a circle of officers and other officials in Steltin, northern German army center.

The mobilization of practically every ablebodied man for military purposes has created a dire shortage of lbaor.

Call 6,000,000 Women.

This shortage has been further increased by the necessity of providing armaments and munitions, instruments, clothing, motor vehicles and other paraphernalia and necessities for the nation's gigantic military establishment.

The government's sudden decision to speed up construction of fortifications at a rate probably unparalleled in history has meant a further drain on the manpower available for the ordinary pursuits of life.

So great are the military exigencies that Naziism has been compelled even to throw into the discard one of its principal tenents, namely, that of keeping women out of industry.

Already 6,000,00 0women have reentered economic life of the nation since spring, according to a German correspondence service, and at present there is a big drive on for married women who were once stenographers to resume that work.

Import 100,000 Farmhands.

In radio broadcasts the government promises such women that their babies will be cared for and their households kept running and their working hours aranged conveniently if only they will turn out.

In addition, Germany has imported 100,00 farmhands, chiefly from Italy, this summer.

Last April 13,400,000 men were employed in German industry. How many have been drafted for the military maneuvers has not been revealed. It was indicated the number must the large by the fact that even Hitler's personal pet projects, such as new construction in Berlin, must yield to the precedence of German rearmament.

Preliminary Scheme Calls for $150,000 Outlay for Building.

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Clarendon, Va., Tel. OXford 0509

The executive committee of the board of trustees of the Arlington Hospital Association voted last night to go forward with their campaign to raise funds for the hospital early next spring.

Preliminary plans for a building with 55 beds, to cost approximately $150,000, were turned over to a special committee of the Arlington County Medical Association for study.

Chairman Gilbert Hall asserted the plans will be submitted to trustees at a meeting September 29 at the courthouse. He said the board hopes to start building next summer on the 16-acre site on North Sixteenth street.

Chairman Hall declared he did not feel that plans of the Group Health Association for a hospital for its members in Arlington County would in any way interfere with plans for a county hospital.

Fairfax Shows $500,000 Gain In Realty Value

Property Worth in County Set at $66,000,000 by Kincheloe.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST,
P. O. BOX 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Falls Church 2088-M.

The assessed valuation of real estate in Fairfax County jumped almost $500,000 for the current tax year, Commissioner of Revenue James U. Kincheloe announced yesterday.

The actual value of real estate in the county was estimated to be between $66,000,000 and $70,000,000 by Kincheloe. However, a great deal of the land in the county is assessed at less than one-fifth of its real value. Since no new real estate assessment was made this year, Kincheloe pointed out the increase is due almost entirely to new construction.

Exclusive of public service corporation holdings, the tax value of real estate and improvements for this year is $13,165,946, which is an increase of $488,469 from the 1937 total.

The report shows an increase of $18,528.67 in the amount of taxes levied on real estate for the year. This increase is due partly to increase in assessed valuations and also to a small increase in local tax rates for the several districts and towns. In the past year taxes of $257,803.32 were levied on real estate, while for the current tax period realty owners will pay $276,331.99.

Providence magisterial district showed the greatest increase in realty assessed valuations for the past year.

The July report of the Fairfax County Dairy Herd Improvement Association No. 2, shows there were herds on test totaling 608 cows, of which 112 were dry, and 5 cows were sold for beef. The association average was 629 pounds of milk and 24.5 pounds of butterfat. Ninety-nine cows produced over 40 pounds of butterfat.

The four honor herds were owned by O. K. Miller, with an average of 950 pounds of milk and 34.2 pounds of butterfat; B. F. Salsbury, averaging 729 pounds milk and 32.9 pounds butterfat; T. B. Mason, averaging 936 pounds milk and 32.3 pounds butterfat, and Mrs. Euterpe Economos, averaging 921 pounds of milk and 32.2 pounds butterfat.

The high cow honors were won by C. T. Elgin, averaging 1,385 pounds of milk and 70.6 pounds butterfat; Col. R. R. Farr, averaging 1,838 pounds milk and 69.8 pounds butterfat; Ravensworth Farm, averaging 2,166 pounds milk and 64.9 pounds butterfat, and J. L. Bristow, averaging 1,203 pounds milk and 64.9 pounds butterfat.

The Farmers and Mechanics Council, Order of Fraternal Americans, will present a large American flag to the Andrew Chapel Methodist Church at the 11 a. m. service tomorrow. The presentation will be made by J. Julian Davis, State president of the order, and will be accepted by the Rev. R. Carl Maxwell, pastor of the church.

Greenbelter Errs In Giving Officer Forbidden Fish

Law as it's enforced in Utopia might puzzle ordinary citizens, but nothing, it seems, can upset a Utopian.

Greenbelt, the Government's model community in Maryland, has just acquired three policemen. One, Yale Huffman, a law student, received a fish as a present from one of Greenbelt's residents.

Huffman ate the fish, then went out and arrested the citizen. The fish, a big fat bass, was caught in the community's lake, which was stocked by the Bureau of Fisheries and where fishing is strictly verboten.

The generous citizen was fined and the new police force heaved a sigh of relief that he wasn't ordered to jail. Utopia has no jail.

Policy Bankers Describe 'Cuts' For Hines Chest

Hines

counsel for the defense, whose shout of objection as he leaped to his feet drowned out the rest of any name the witness may have been uttering. Justice Pecore ruled for Stryker and forbade the witness to go on at that time.

Pompez, on the witness stand today, named "Judge Capshaw" as the magistrate who dismissed the charges against his employes, but Justice Pecora ruled the testimony inadmissible until the prosecution had established a legal foundation for it.

Woman Testifies.

The other two witnesses who told of the raids and their subsequent discharge in court were Oscar Levis, colored aide of Schultz who was placed in the bank in a managerial role when Schultz took it over, and Illiana "Billie" Hammond, colored, who worked for Pompez from 1930 to 1937.

From the two big policy bankers, Ison and Pompez, the crowded courtroom heard that the Thanksgiving of 1931, was a day of mourning for the policy bankers of Harlem and rejoicing for the players, for No. 527 turned up as the winner from the pari-mutual figures of the Coney Island Race Track in Cincinnati, and it is a tradition in Harlem to play 527 just before each Thanksgiving.

Ison lost $18,000 above his day's receipts of between $7,000 and $8,000, he testified, in paying off the winners. Pompez lost $60,000, and although, he testified, he used every cent he had in the world to pay the winners he was more than $7,000 shy of paying off when Schultz mobsters first called on him with the demand that he pay "the Dutchman" protection money.

Opening for Schultz.

It was due to that No. 527 turning up a winner, from the racetrack of William V. "Big Bill" Dwyer in Cincinnati, that Schultz was enabled to "arm" his way into the Harlem policy racket with comparative ease, the testimony revealed. Ison turned to Schultz for a loan, by advice of J. Richard "Dixie" Davis, counsel for the Schultz mob, he testified, and "the Dutchman" granted it, sending him $11,000 by George Weinberg, but exacted the compact that he should be cut into the business with a two-thirds interest, leaving Ison only one-third owner.

Similarly, though Pompez wriggled for weeks before he came to terms with the gangsters, according to his testimony, he also needed a loan from Schultz and obtained it.

"Spasm" testified that he took over the policy bank of Wilfred Brunder, a former witness in the case, shortly after Brunder came out of jail in 1928, and put Brunder on his pay roll at $100 a week. He said he ran its receipts up to between $8,000 and $11,000 a day.

Became Davis Client.

He said he began to use "Dixie" Davis as his lawyer in 1931, and in 1937 went to France for his health, only to learn when he got there that he had been indicted. He negotiated with the district attorney's office, he said, through his wife and a lawyer, and came back to this country with the understanding that he would plead guilty to the misdemeanor section of the indictment brought against him in July, 1937. He promised, he said, that he would testify truthfully in the case the district attorney's office was then building against alleged policy racketeers, and obtained an agreement that the district attorney would recommend clemency.

Pistol on Table.

When "Dixie" Davis took him to Schultz's apartment to negotiate for his loan, after the disastrous Thanksgiving of 1931, he testified, Schultz did not appear until 2 a. m., when he came in with a bodyguard and "Bo" Weinberg, George Weinberg and "Abe" Landau. Schultz invited him to go with him into a little room in which they sat about a table and Schultz took a pistol from his clothing and laid it on that table.

Ison said he thought Schultz's requirement of two-thirds of the business was unfair, but he agreed to accept it. So, he said, Schultz was shaking him down for about $600 a week. "Bo" Weinberg and "Abe" Landau once "took him for a ride" and filled his ears with threats, he said, because they, too, wanted a share in his proceeds, but they let him go. Weinberg was placed in the bank as manager, and although Ison was to get a salary of $200 a week and a third of the profits, according to the agreement, he never received any profits.

At one of their business conferences, he said, Schultz told his aides to start studying the Cuban lottery racket, as he believed he might cut into it. The witness also testified to the meetings of controllers claled by Schultz, at which these employes were informed that their share of the bets would be cut from 30 per cent to 25 per cent. There was a loud outcry from the controllers, Ison testified, but "Abe" Landau informed them they would "take it and like it."

They took it, but their business fell off so lamentably that soon Schultz reinstated the old 30 per cent compensation, Ison testified.

Stryker did his best to make the witness testify that the inducements he received from Dewey were what had brought him to the witness stand to testify against Hines, but the witness was unshaken in his denials. Dewey intervened to ask him whether the only consideration was not the recommendation coming to him for clemency when he pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor, and asked him whether he was ready to plead. Ison said he was. From the witness chair and plead Dewey suggested that he step down before Justice Pecora, but the justice would not entertain the plea.

larly urged that special police attention be given to motorists who ignore the rights of walkers at busy downtown intersections.

"I expect arrests to be made when a negligent driver insists on forcing his way through a crowd of pedestrians crossing on proper signals," Hazen said. "The pedestrian must be protected—but he also must recognize his responsibility."

In only one instance did Hazen disapprove a proposal submitted by the committee. He felt a suggested system of pedestrian control would do little to aid the current "emergency."

He pointed out that even now pedestrians pay little or no attention to "walk" lights on downtown F street.

Appeals to Be Made.

The possibility of extending Washington's present system of one-way streets to outlying sections of the city—another recommendation of the committee—was taken under consideration by Hazen.

All other phases of the committee's proposals—a 24-point program to include city-wide safety education, improvement of enforcement methods and extension of recreation facilities for children—will be acted upon at once, said Hazen.

Appeals for volunteer safety workers and co-operation from business and public utility heads will be sent throughout the city today, he added.

Commenting on the recent ruling of Auditor Dan Donovan which prohibits Capt. Arthur Miller, commander of the Third Police Precinct, from accepting a scholarship to the Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute, Hazen said: "The auditor has ruled that Capt. Miller's salary cannot be paid while he is not actually on police duty. My hands are tied and it is a shame."

A window display of safety posters—winners in a recent "drive safely" contest—was offered yesterday by the Muth Co., dealers in artists', draftsmen's and painters' supplies, coindidental with enrollment in The Post-Junior Board program.

Outstanding safety posters, selected by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as one of the contest judges, will be on view at the Muth Co. for an indefinite period.

ing to the reports, that Britain is following a policy largely parallel to that of the United States in the Far East and is not prepared to discuss the vital question of credits for Japan—which admittedly desires large sums for North China development—until she has specific assurances that foreign rights in China will be respected.

It was intimated that the government is in a position to prevent private British concerns from giving credits to private Japanese groups for use in China.

Yoshida's visit followed a series of conferences in Tokyo between British Ambassador Sir Alexander Craigie and Japanese Foreign Minister Gen. K. Ugaki.

Japan to Call Million.

Shanghai (Saturday), Aug. 20 (U.P.).—Japan today prepared to mobilize more than 1,000,000 additional men and to go forward with her conquest of China regardless of increasing foreign opposition.

In Tokyo the cabinet decided to invoke new sections of the drastic imperial mobilization law, which makes every subject of Emperor Hirohito and his possessions subject to military service, and to require immediate registration of physicians, pharmacists and technical school graduates.

U. S. Gunboat Held Up.

Special Cable to The Post.

Hankow, Aug. 19.—Vice Admiral Koshiro Oikawa, commander in chief of Japan's China flee t,in a communication delivered to Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander in chief of the American Asiatic fleet, has refused permission to the United States Gunboat Monocacy to proceed down the Yangtze River from Kiukiang to Shanghai, it was learned reliably here today.

Yarnell previously had requested permission to move the gunboat on the grounds that Monocacy, which is a coal-burned, has been unable to obtain fuel at Kiukiang and has been unable to obtain supplies from other river sources because the Yangtze is closed to navigation.

Since the Japanese occupation of Kiukiang and the restoration of order at that port 135 miles downriver from here, the Monocacy, which is due to be decommissioned at the close of the China hostilities, no longer is needed at Kiukiang. Yarnell recently communicated to the Department of State his reluctance to order the Monocacy to Shanghai, a river voyage of 450 miles, without Japanese consent because of the possibility of an incident.

Sasscer Attacks Labor Records of Jackson, O'Conor

The labor record of Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, has been "hostile" and that of Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor has been "negative," Senate President Lansdale G. Sasscer, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Maryland, said last night at Welsh's Grove, Anne Arundel County.

"Concerning myself," he said, "all of my many friends in labor know that I have definitely and specifically fought their battles in the Legislature for every major program aimed to protect the legitimate rights of labor. Therefore, the American Federation of Labor indorsement which I have received was of necessity based on past performances and on promises."

In 1922, he said, "before I had any thought of running for any State-wide office," he fought against repeal of the full crew bill "stood with the trainmen twice in connection with the same bill on two later occasions." He said he was "a pioneer in unemployment insurance," supported the anti-injunction bill, worked to liberalize the workmen's compensation act and "fought to the last ditch in defeating the sales tax."

"The recent controversy between Mayor Jackson and O'Connor in their battle for the labor vote," he said, "again demonstrates that with me it is a matter of performance, and with the other candidates it is a matter of words."

Filipino Is Called Victim of Illusion In Quezon Speech

Special Cable to The Post.

Manila, Aug. 19.—President Quezon climaxed a two-day nation-wide celebration of his sixtieth birthday with a "State of the Nation" address today before more than 40,000 students and teachers. Quezon said the present-day Filipino was "the victim of illusions and hopes about his own moral and spiritual prowess" and found him badly wanting when compared to his forefathers who fought for the freedom of their native land.

The President said that "our tendency toward parasitism is not inclined to sustained strenuous effort. Face-saving is our dominant note in the confused sympathy of existence."

pital last year and congratulated the Americans for "fighting for a great cause." Both are members of the so-called House liberal bloc.

"They gave us the regulation Soviet salute—the raised clenched fist," Halpern said.

Miss Huffman, secretary of the committee on relief status of professional theater employes of the New York Federal Theater Project, told the committee that Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, director of WPA Federal Theaters, is communistically inclined, although she cannot prove that she is a member of the party. She also accused Deputy Works Progress Administrator Aubrey Williams of promoting growth of the Workers' Alliance.

Sympathies Traced.

The witness said Mrs. Flanagan's sympathies for Communism can be traced in some of her plays, and that as far back as 1927 she made a tour of Soviet theaters and wrote a book lauding them.

She alleged that all but one of the supervisors of the New York project are members of the Workers' Alliance, that an insurance salesman had been given a high-ranking job without previous theater experience, and that a "razor blade peddler" was given an actor's role.

Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, indicated he intended to call for all of the records of the Federal theater projects. Miss Huffman related that Workers' Alliance statements and propaganda frequently "cluttered up" the projects' bulletin boards but that the practice was stopped after the Congressional inquiry began.

Earlier, Margaret A. Kerr, of the Los Angeles Better America Federation, was recalled to identify and explain her previous documentary evidence allegedly linking Harry Bridges, West Coast C. I. O. leader, with the Communist Party. She told of attending a meeting last November in San Francisco commemorating the twentieth anniversary of the Communistic government in Russia. She said that more than $6,000 was collected at the meeting to establish a daily Communist newspaper in San Francisco and that the "movie section" contributed about $1,000 with a request "not to disclose names."

While the committee is inquiring into charges that a high Labor Department official "protected" Bridges while efforts were being made to deport him as an Alien and Communist, the C. I. O. News alleged that the Dies committee is playing a "crap game with loaded dice" and ridiculed testimony that the C. I. O. is filled with "Reds."

Dies indicated Bridges would be called to testify and said that C. I. O. Chairman John L. Lewis had been invited to testify.

Bridges Admits Red Ideas.

Los Angeles, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Harry Bridges, West Coast C. I. O. leader under fire before the Dies Congressional investigating committee, said tonight that he is "sympathetic" with a "lot of Communist ideas," but hotly denied he is or was a member of the Communist Party.

Healy Denies Quitting.

Boston, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Published reports he had resigned from the Dies Congressional committee ingestigating un-American activities were denied tonight by Representative Healy (Democrat), of Massachusetts.

Arriving at his Somerville home from Washington, Healy told the United Press that he had not quit, and had no intentions of resigning, had come to Massachusetts to begin his campaign for re-election.

This substantiated denials of the reports made by Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House committee, in Washington yesterday.

Alexandria V.F.W. To Hold Carnival

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of Alexandria last night announced they would hold a gala week of festivity on the grounds at Mount Vernon drive and Washington street, ommencing Monday, for the benefit of their charity fund.

The free attraction will be the Sensation Flyers, late of the Ringling circus, who will appear nightly. The shows arrive Sunday and will open at 7 p. m. Monday.

Insurgent military leaders confirmed that Franco himself would lead a new drive. He named Gen. Juan Vigon, former chief of staff of the northern insurgent army, as chief of his personal staff.

Reports of the new stirrings in insurgent Spain followed these developments:

The "coincidence" of visits to Zurich, Switzerland, by the Premier of the Barcelona government and the Duke of Alba, Spanish insurgent representative in London.

British pressure on Italy for information on charges that Premier Mussolini had sent troop reinforcements and additional war material to insurgent Spain. The British first directed Italian attention to these charges 11 days ago.

Responsible officials in Rome had indicated the memorandum would be ignored. Sir Noel Charles, British charge d'affaires, however, informed Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano last night that London expected an answer.

He promised "to bring more definite proof of life after death" by communicating with his flock, and later by appearing.

Gorman May Head Woolen Workers

Providence, R. I., Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Francis Gorman, president of the dormant United Textile Workers of America, probably will make his bid the leadership of Woolen and Worsted Workers here Sundaq.

It was reported Gorman might attempt to lead the woolen workers from the C. I. O. to the American Federation of Labor, which has failed in attempts to establish a powerful rival textile union.

The U. T. W. A. was affiliated with the A. F. of L. before it was taken over by the T. W. O. C. in March, 1937.

Rep. McMillan Ill, His Twin Brother Takes S. C. Stump

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 19 (AP).—The "stand-in," long a Hollywood institution, has appeared in one of South Carolina's Congressional races.

Representative McMillan, of Charleston, has been prevented by illness from making an active campaign, so his twin brother, John B. McMillan, a member of the State public service commission, substitutes for him.

Except for a few pounds difference in weight, the McMillan twins are dead ringers for each other.

"I am not here," John B. told one audience, "to argue general questions which may have arisen in this campaign but to represent my brother in behalf of keeping the record straight."

He said he would appear at all campaign meetings until the primary, August 30.

Bishop Urges United Protestant Church

Harrisonburg, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—Bishop Ralph S. Cushman, of Denver, a leader in the Northern Methodist Church, told the Bible conference at Massanetta Springs today that a united protestant church is needed.

Citing the recent action of Methodists for unification of that church, he said, "nothing is more discouraging than the failure of ministers of one denomination to unite with those of other denominations."

D. C. Businessman Has Taught Women's Bible Class 30 Years

Arthur Bishop Is First and Only Teacher of Lydia Group.

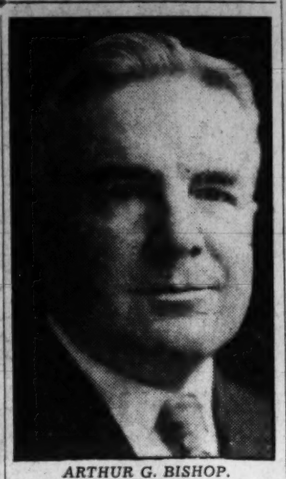
A Washington businessman has been teaching the Lydia Women's Bible Class of the Ninth Street Christian Church for 30 years, approaching a local record for continuous service in that field.

He is Arthur G. Bishop, president of the Washington Title Insurance Co., first and only teacher of the group he helped to organize back in 1908 with a nucleus of 18 members, nine of whom still remain active, including the treasuer, Miss Eva Herbert. Six have moved from the city, three have died.

Voluntary class contributions of more than $1,000 annually toward charitable and missionary enterprises have been made possible, according to Mr. Bishop, because some of the 100 women enrollees are "tithers;" that is, they lay aside percentages of their incomes for benevolence. No entertainments or other projects are promoted for money-raising purposes.

Many women coming to the District during the World War to take temporary Federal positions aligned themselves with the Lydia Class, later returning to their native States, where they were inspired to launch similar movements.

The Bible unit, which furnished numerous officials for the church and Sunday school, sponsors religious services at the Central Union Mission and the Home for the Aged at Blue Plains, and also arranges an annual banquet for several hundred persons.



ARTHUR G. BISHOP.

Mrs. Bishop, the teacher's wife, and Mrs. Clifford H. Jope, whose husband is pastor of the Ninth Street congregation, are associated with the class. The present administration, in addition to Miss Herbert, is as follows: Mrs. Claire Colsten, president; Miss Bertha Jabin, vice president, and Miss Ettalie Baker, secretary.

The other active charter members are Miss Catherine Davis, Mrs. Ethel Fowler, Miss Ruth Graves, Miss Katie O'Meara, Mrs. Maude Harvey, Mrs. Chloe Meader, Mrs. Rae Quantrille and Mrs. Beulah Sullivan.

Peace Suggestion Evokes Argument At Youth Congress

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Aug. 19 (AP).—A tentative program for international peace evoked a sharp dispute today at the second World Youth Congress here.

The program, prepared by the Commission on the Religious and Philosophical Base of Peace, was attacked by Ernest B. Kalilbala, giant colored delegate from East Africa, who asserted that European delegations were attempting to "foster policies which already have failed to provide international peace."

"The state is made to serve man and not intended to suppress him," the proposal, which later will come before the convention as a whole, asserted. It also called for the "brotherhood of mankind and international relationship."

Dissension arose among American delegates over the best method of obtaining peace.

Christian Science Subject Is 'Mind'

"Mind" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The golden text is from Job 36:5: "Behold, God is mighty, and despieth not any; he is mighty in strength and wisdom."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever."

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Divine metaphysics, as revealed to spiritual understanding, shows clearly that all is Mind, and that Mind is God, omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience—that is all power, all presence, all Science. Hence all is in reality the manifestation of Mind."

No Need For Haste.

In dedicating the new international Thousand Islands Bridge President Roosevelt emphasized the joint responsibility of this country and Canada for developing the navigation and power resources of the St. Lawrence waterway. He made it plain, too, that he thinks development should not be delayed.

There is no question that the governments of the two countries are ultimately responsible for seeing that the power resources and the navigation facilities of the region are properly developed, when they are needed. There is, however, grave doubt about the wisdom of spending large sums on power projects that anticipate the needs of the distant future and on waterway developments that cost too much in proportion to the anticipated benefits.

The President is pressing for action as if delay would spell disaster. The mere fact that the Federal Government would legally be compelled to link St. Lawrence power developments with navigation plans does not deter him, although there appears to be no valid excuse for immediate construction of a costly seaway. Mr. Roosevelt hints darkly that unless action comes soon, a sinister group of American "interests" may meantime "determine the economic fate of a large area, both in Canada and the United States."

As a matter of fact, opposition to the President's power plans is especially strong in the Province of Ontario with its publicly owned projects. Determined opposition comes, too, from cities whose shipping and storage businesses are threatened or whose prestige might be injured by the proposed developments. In short, a host of "interests" besides those connected with power groups have to be considered. Haste would be most unwise under the circumstances.

Power sites already in private hands present neither more nor less of a problem now than they will some years hence. And the cost to this country of persuading Canadians that they ought to develop more power when they already have a superabundance of it would be very high. That was evident from the terms of the draft waterway treaty which the State Department submitted last spring for Canadian consideration.

Expert opinion indicates that it would be unnecessarily costly to try to develop power too long in advance of industrial demands for it. And surely the United States and Canada do not need to entrench themselves in the power field prematurely merely to resist the inroads of private interests. The two governments have ways and means of restraining utilities that may seek to exploit the public without necessarily superseding them or preventing their normal growth.

The Franc Again Threatened.

Although less than three months have elapsed since the franc was last devalued, Premier Daladier has already found it necessary to deny that his government is contemplating further devaluation or is planning to institute a system of exchange control.

His disclaimer is revealing. It shows how strained the French financial situation has again become despite the vigorous measures taken by the present regime. Following the establishment of the Daladier government last spring a considerable amount of capital returned to France from hiding places abroad. But most of it, as former Premier Blum complained the other day, found its way not into productive enterprises but into bank deposits and short-term paper and so could easily take flight again.

Recently, as M. Daladier admits, there has been a renewed outbreak in France of gold buying and gold hoarding. To combat this development a number of foreigners and Frenchmen accused of "black Bourse" speculation have been rounded up by the police. But such action, however justifiable, can have only a temporary value so long as the underlying situation remains bad. And while normal receipts and expenditures have brought the national budget nearer a balance, the expanding needs of rearmament plus the growing uncertainties regarding the international outlook have tended to undo all that M. Daladier and his colleagues have done. No wonder, then, that capital in France remains panicky and in seeking flight tends to undermine the stability of the franc.

It is by no means certain, therefore, that the French government's efforts to avoid devaluation and exchange control will meet with success. That will depend on several factors, among them the extent to which France can participate in the recovery movement now slowly under way in the United States and abroad and, above all, the easing of existing international tensions. Should these tensions increase rather than diminish, M. Daladier's statement that "the government is resolutely hostile both to exchange control and to any new devaluation of the franc," may prove of only temporary significance.

Underlying The Purge.

One trend of thought which has come to the fore in the purge controversy demands especially thoughtful and dispassionate analysis. It is being said in many circles that the President had no reasonable alternative to throwing down the gauge of battle to "yes, but" legislators; that he has been elected by the people to carry out a specific mandate, and that he must therefore use his influence to secure a Congress that will cooperate with him.

To some extent that viewpoint was presented by Mr. Roosevelt himself when he launched his attack upon Senator Tydings and Representative O'Connor. It has since been further elaborated. In a letter to the editor appearing elsewhere on this page Linn A. E. Gale makes a vigorous defense of the President's interference in State primaries on the ground that Mr. Roosevelt is the responsible Government official to whom the people have assigned the task of putting a program into effect. He speaks of the President as being "theoretically endowed with the authority to execute policies in harmony with the principles he advocates" and complains that the Chief Executive has not had an opportunity to make his will effective.

It is precisely that view of the Presidency which makes the attempted purge an issue of great national significance. In their enthusiasm for the New Deal many citizens have apparently forgotten that our Government is one of divided powers. Of course the President's broad executive authority gives him a great opportunity for leadership. But the legislative powers belong to Congress no less definitely than the judicial powers belong to the Supreme Court.

Under the American system of government the President could have no mandate to put a legislative program into effect, for he has no such power. He has a definite responsibility to make recommendations to Congress, and he may veto bills that meet with his disapproval. Beyond that, however, the enactment of national legislation is solely the duty of Congress. And the selection of Senators and Representatives to perform this function is solely the responsibility of the people.

Some of the most ardent defenders of the attempted purge seem to take it for granted that the President should function as a legislature and executive merged into one. Certainly that would be the quickest means of securing 100 per cent enactment of the New Deal program. But it would also bring to an end the form of democratic government which has functioned in this country for a century and a half. To ignore that obvious fact would be to open the way to totalitarian rule.

In a dictatorship legislators are chosen to co-operate with the executive. In a democracy they are chosen to represent their own constituents. They have no responsibility to the President. If the President is ever allowed to make them answerable to him, Congress would become only an unnecessary expense to taxpayers. It must not be forgotten that legislators as well as the President are elected by the people. When they fail to render satisfactory service they can be readily replaced. But the decision should be rendered by the voters without any meddling by Federal officials holding tremendous influence over dependent groups.

The issue which the President has raised ought to be considered, therefore, in terms of governmental function. It is too fundamental for emotional reactions or expedient thinking. For it boils down to the question of whether the fate of the Nation shall rest with a powerful executive wielding control over legislators or with an independent Congress directly representing the people.

Germany's Trade Appeal.

The plea for more trade between Germany and the United States made by Dr. Rudolf Brinkmann, State Secretary in the Economics Ministry of the Reich, carries a suggestion of urgency that has not been so apparent in the past. Germany undoubtedly has great need of raw materials and other goods of which we have a superabundance. Both countries would benefit, indeed, as Dr. Brinkmann says, from the re-establishment of friendly trade relations. But there are insuperable objections to participation in the barter form of exchange which Germany desires.

To obligate ourselves to accept certain quantities of German goods in payment for our exports to that country would make the United States party to a restrictive bilateral pact which would canalize trade and interfere with the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements with other nations. Indeed, as Secretary Hull indicated in a press interview, such an arrangement would be equivalent to repudiation of the principles and policies followed by the State Department in endeavoring to expand foreign commerce.

The fact that Germany is on our "blacklist" does not indicate any lack of understanding of the economic difficulties which compelled her to revert to a crude form of barter in international dealings. It merely testifies to our inability to accord the advantages of our generalized "most favored nation" policy to an authoritarian state whose methods of trading tend to hamper rather than facilitate the free exchange of goods between nations.

Citizens Aid To Safety.

As its own members would doubtless be quick to admit, the citizens advisory committee on accident prevention can hope to influence only one aspect of the highway safety problem.

Laymen can scarcely cope with matters of engineering or law enforcement. Experts are needed in these fields. But no more unusual attributes than energy, enthusiasm and common sense are needed to promote better driving—and discourage reckless walking. These, plainly, the new committee possesses in abundance. Proof is seen in the 24 recommendations sent by it to the Board of Commissioners. All except one of the proposals has the approval of Commissioner Hazen. When put into effect, they should make Washingtonians more than ever aware of their responsibilities in stemming the recent sudden spurt in traffic injuries and deaths.

Having initiated a constructive program in respect to education, the committee may now be inclined to turn its abilities to the assistance of the experts. Indirectly, it could help considerably. A Washington police officer has been awarded a fellowship at the Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute. Located at Evanston, Ill., where the Kreml system of accident prevention was developed, it is the outstanding institution of its kind. For Washington to have one of its traffic officers trained at Northwestern would be an incalculable advantage in its highway safety campaign.

But, although the fellowship carries with it funds to support a recipient during the scholastic term, no provision is made for his dependents. And the District law forbids the payment of a salary to a police officer not actually on duty. Thus, unless some assistance can be assured him, Capt. Miller must decline the Northwestern award. Could not the citizens committee interest itself in the case?

Double Standard In Politics.

The forced resignation of Edgar B. Dunlap, Atlanta counsel for the RFC, was amply justified in view of his refusal to discontinue his political activities on behalf of Senator George. The RFC is a business institution which should be completely divorced from politics.

Mr. Dunlap maintains, however, that he has as much right to enter the campaign as District Attorney Lawrence Camp, indorsed by President Roosevelt as a successor to Senator George. To that argument the answer is that Mr. Camp deserves to be sharply censured for not resigning his office before plunging into a heated political contest. It is impossible to believe that his campaigning leaves much time for efficient discharge of the duties for which he draws a salary from the Government. But instead of being censured or dismissed, he is rewarded by Presidential campaigning in his behalf.

There would be no doubt in anybody's mind that Mr. Dunlap's conduct warranted dismissal if the RFC could show that it has dealt just as rigorously with all other employes who have participated actively in politics. It may be a mere accident that a friend of Senator George, a purge victim, has been singled out for discipline. But to allay suspicion of ulterior motives, an explanation is needed. For its own protection the RFC should make public the names of any other employes who have been dismissed for active participation in politics.

Unless the rule of nonparticipation is enforced without making any exceptions it may easily become a new weapon of political coercion in the hands of those in power. The Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee is evidently aware of that dangerous possibility or it would not be sending an investigator to Atlanta to "examine the facts."

Arkansas Amenities.

Nothing, said the poet Terence, is more valuable to a man than courtesy. If this be so, Arkansas can boast a man of virtually limitless credit.

Representative W. J. Driver of Osceola was defeated last week in his efforts to win renomination in the First Congressional District in the Bowie State. Unmindful of the perfunctory congratulations or bitter comments usually voiced by repudiated politicians, Mr. Driver graciously announced to his constituency:

"I was defeated by a young man who exhibited the finest energy I have ever seen. He made a remarkable campaign. He is young enough, intelligent enough and attractive enough to make a splendid Representative in Congress. I shall be happy to co-operate with him in every way toward getting him started in Congressional work and I am sure that his career will be marked by brilliant service to his people."

Such a commendable attitude in defeat may lead many Arkansas citizens to doubt the wisdom of their votes against Congressman Driver.

We even saw an optimist who was worried today. He said all the air castles he had been building in Spain had been bombed.

"It is reported that irresponsible employment agencies are fleecing the unemployed." Living off the flat of the land, eh?

"A Florida hermit, 90 years old, has never seen an automobile."—Newspaper filler. He doesn't know what's missing him.

Democracy Of Tomorrow?

The Presidential Purge

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Upon What Meat?" Under this heading The Washington Post bitterly assails President Roosevelt for urging the defeat of Senator Walter F. George for renomination.

The ancient interrogation should be flung, not at Franklin Delano Roosevelt, but at legislators of the type of Senator George. The people may well ask what diet has transformed these reactionary lawmakers into such superior clay that they may cling to the designation of Democrats while persistently opposing key measures supported by the Democratic President and an overwhelming majority of the Democratic Party—measures vital to the advancement of industrial democracy—and expect their party's leader to supinely acquiesce in the frustration of his efforts to have these measures enacted.

After the voters have in three consecutive elections decisively indicated their approval of Rooseveltian objectives, the President certainly has a right actively to endeavor to attain these objectives. In order to succeed, there must obviously be a sufficient number of men in Congress who will co-operate with him. Assuredly, nobody in his right mind expects the President to accomplish his aims when prominent Senators and Representatives, still wearing the Democratic label, are able to repeatedly thwart his plans and defeat his bills.

In his five and a half years in the Presidency, Mr. Roosevelt has never had continuously consistent backing from the whole Democratic contingent in Congress. Over and over again important proposals of the Executive have been pigeon-holed, buried in committee or otherwise kept from seeing the light of day. More than once some of these proposals have been beaten in a straight-out vote. Several have been enacted after amendments stripped them of effective features. Some have been passed reluctantly after Presidential insistence and aroused public opinion drove unwilling members to act in the interest of the people instead of big business. The percentage of Administration measures written onto the statute books and backed readily by a substantial majority of Democratic Senators and Representatives has not been large.

Is it any wonder the President seeks the elimination of the obstructionists who have sabotaged his program? Is it surprising that he asks for a fair chance to put his policies into effect? Handicapped by treachery, misrepresentation, hostile intrigues and other acts of opposition within his own ranks, he has never yet succeeded in translating into reality more than a part of his reforms. Of course, he wants such an opportunity. So would any President, no matter what his party or tendencies, if he believed in any principles earnestly enough to desire to see them become the law of the land.

How can a President carry out his official responsibility otherwise? If he lacks this co-operation, he might as well not be President. Theoretically endowed with authority to execute policies in harmony with the principles he advocates, such a President has less power in some respects than the minority leader of either house of Congress. The minority leader can, through his followers and aided by bolting Democrats like Senator George, check legislation that the President advocates. The President, due to this vicious alliance of a reactionary minority of Congressmen in a majority party that is committed to progressive democracy with the reactionary Congressmen belonging to a reactionary minority party, is therefore helpless to obtain enactment of his measures—although in theory he is the Nation's head and although a huge majority of the voters have told him to go ahead with the consummation of the New Deal. What a farce, what a social and governmental tragedy, when a majority President and a majority party, undeniably reflecting the demands of a majority of the electorate thus find their hands tied!

The perpetuation of such a state of affairs would reduce the highest official of the country to a status partially comparable to that of an infant in a European country who possesses the official title and in whose name go forth edicts of which he has not written a single syllable.

LINN A. E. GALE.
Washington, Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: John O'Connor says he stands at Thermopylae. This is a very dangerous place to stand. My meager knowledge of Greek history tells me that the Spartans, under the magnificent leadership of Leonidas, stood at the same place and were burned and purged away. The only memory we have of that eventful and heroic battle is the inscription: Go and tell the Lacedaemonians that we lie here in obedience to their orders. I would strongly suggest to O'Connor and his fellow purgees to immediately leave the dangerous pass of Thermopylae. They should stand at Armageddon and battle for the Lord. Their chances for salvation will be much better at the latter place than at the former.

DAN DIXON.
Washington, Aug. 19.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to congratulate the writer of the editorial in The Post of August 13 on his courage in saying what is in the minds of many of the readers of the two-column editorial entitled, "Upon What Meat?"

My personal opinion is that the President of all the States has no right to invade any particular State and dictate to its people as to who should be their candidates for public office. As a long-time resident of the District of Columbia I have no vote, but, did I have that privilege, I should do so at my own discretion.

I hope the editorial will be widely read and copied in other papers, for "our Caesar" is indeed feeding upon dangerous "meat."

E. B. SPENCER.
Washington, Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The cartoon published by you on Saturday, August 13, in connection with the editorial "Upon What Meat" was not only viciously political in tone but a gross exaggeration. Everyone knows the President invited Senator George to be present when his speech was delivered; furthermore, it is well known that the Senator was present. How did you dare insult all of us with such rank distortion?

As for the situation in Georgia, the test of its present leadership lies in the statistics on literacy. If I am not mistaken it was Senator George who attempted to exclude the rural postal service from civil service requirements. Possibly there is some connection between these facts.

At any rate, you have done yourself a grave injustice to print the unsigned editorial and the accompanying cartoon of Saturday, August 13. There are some old Americans who believe in giving statesmanship a chance and trying to leave politics where it originated, in the hands of the robber barons.

B. V. BERNHARD.
Rockville, Md., Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Southerners who really love the South find their emotional leanings at war with their reasons in trying to find how to gauge the Georgia situation. The first impulse is to resent the President's "invasion" of States' rights. Certainly there should have been a better way to accomplish the end he desired.

And certainly his persistent attempts to influence votes in favor of the men he prefers to see in Congress is not Jeffersonian democracy. If times have so changed, then let us no longer call Jefferson a Democrat; and let us no longer say that present-day democracy is based on States' rights. In fact, Mr. Roosevelt is in spirit a Hamiltonian, pure and simple, in his almost demand for centralization of power in the Executive. Or, if not in the Executive, then in men who think with the Executive, which is the same thing.

But there is another side to this attempt to purge the legislative branch of the Government of men not wholly in sympathy with the President's many experiments. The South has recently been "surveyed." Its problems have been listed. Its failures have been spread on the record for all men to read. Not all Southern men have been Calhouns, or Morgans, or Henry Bradys. I confess I felt my sympathy for Senator George oozing out when I read how he appeals to "Sherman's ride to the sea," to "carpetbaggers," to Southern resentment to interference from the North, and all of that. This is not argument, but an appeal to superficial, local emotions.

If Senator George or any other representative from the South truly loves the section from which he comes, he will place the common good before his own ambitions or desires. If Senator George or Senator Smith of South Carolina is conscientious in believing that he knows what is best for his State, let him make his pleas to the people on that basis; not on superficial partisanism of almost childish sort. By such arguments men show they are not the best representatives of a section of the Union that confessedly is in need of real leadership. So I have come to feel that the President is right in spirit, but wrong in practice.

J. O. KNOTT.
Washington, Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I concede you the right to present the conservative or reactionary view of all public questions and even to be unfair to everything liberal or progressive if you should choose such a narrow course. You are not always unfair and the Lindley articles are a great oasis of fairness and bigness in the newspaperdom of the whole country. However, the cartoon you published on August 13 of President Roosevelt stabbing Senator George in the back with a great dagger and the statement, "God bless you Walter, let's always be friends" is such a distortion of the facts as to pass far beyond the cartoonist's license.

The President did not stab George in the back either personally or politically. What he did was certainly to his face and without the slightest suggestion of treachery. It was the second time Senator George had appeared upon the same platform to gain political favor by a show of friendship and but shortly after he had eulogized "Our Great President." It was also after the President had frankly written his views to Senator George. To distort these facts into a picture of Brutus treachery and murder is a disgrace to your paper.

J. OTIS WATSON.
Mount Rainier, Md., Aug. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in The Post of August 12, "My Own Party," is the finest thing that I have seen published in any newspaper for a long time. If it does not awaken the consciences of those who are careless of the drift in our country, I cannot imagine what will unless it be a great catastrophe.

The editorial in today's Post, with the title "The Second Youth Congress," I believe gives fairly accurate data of the thought processes of today's boys and girls, not alone in Maryland but throughout the country. I cannot but think that this attitude of the boys and girls has come about because of the chaotic conditions resulting from the attempt on the part of idealists to upset the law of equilibrium—supply and demand—nature's law; in fact, God's law.

Gratuitous Grandiosity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of all the silly, vainglorious gestures I have encountered in 40 years of newspaper reading the offer of President Roosevelt to help Canada if invaded by an enemy is an all-time high.

In the first place, the British navy is completely capable of guarding Canadian coasts and Downing street, while it will doubtless be polite, will rightfully feel that Mr. Roosevelt is either impertinent or is suffering another attack of Messiah complex.

In the second place, I would hate to be the invading "empire" that put foot on Canadian soil. Those Maple Leaf boys are the toughest troops in the world and if there is any doubt of it, examine the records of the British army in the World War. Five divisions of Canadian troops would chase the Japanese army in China into the Yellow River. The Princess Pat regiment could chase all the Black Shirts in Spain into the Elbro.

Help Canada! Nom de Dieu!

A better idea is to ask Canada to help us keep the United States from being turned over to the WPA.

Miss Octa.

IT WAS such an odd little vine threading its way persistently through the jungle of honeysuckle. When I saw the varicolored berries hanging in clusters I could hardly believe my eyes. Some were a cool turquoise, others fuchsia, delicate lilac or rose. The vine was full of them.

"I'll ask Miss Octa about them," I promised myself and then I remembered.

• • • •

I couldn't ask Miss Octa any more questions about the flora of Rock Creek Park because she had gone away. Keeping roomers had proved too precarious a way for an elderly woman to find a living. So a niece in a distant city had sent for her. There, she will keep house and care for the children, in exchange for her keep. But she will miss the park which for so many years occupied half of her time and nearly all of her thoughts.

Miss Octa is one of these misfits of life. City born and bred, she is rootbound body and soul in the earth. Some hill woman now pining away her life behind imprisoning mountains must have drawn the lot Providence intended for Miss Octa. For in soul she belongs to the glen and the forests, to rivers and windy days.

But as if they were sorry for their own bungling the fates were kind enough to give her the park for a while, and Miss Octa radiated gratitude for it every day of her life here. Rain or shine, Sundays and work-days, year-in year-out, she donned her ample hat, collected her parasol and capacious bag and turned in at the park.

I shall never forget the first time I saw her. It was an early spring day that, one of the kind that breed restlessness, and I was working it off by a walk through the park. It was while I was climbing a slope of new grass I came upon her. She was standing there pondering, the parasol grasped in one hand and the bag in the other.

I halted, wondering if I were seeing things. Miss Octa is an unforgettable figure. She is gaunt as winter trees and her clothes belong to the pre-war wardrobe. The hat has a brim and a crown as though it were actually intended as covering for the head. The dress and coat are durable garments of the gored era, if you know what I mean, but the parasol is definitely 1902. It has grown old gracefully, as they say, and its once white cover and handle have mellowed to the tawniness of ripe wheat.

Then she became aware that she was not alone. She turned toward me and making a sweeping gesture with the parasol, she said

"'—the joyous Book of Spring lies open writ in blossoms.'"

I laughed and answered:

"'When Spring unlocks the flowers
To paint the laughing soil—'"

After this poetic flier we were friends. As time passed I came to appreciate Miss Octa and her woodland lore. In all the vastness of the park there was not a plant that she was not on speaking terms with. A walk with her took on the flavor of an exploration and small growing things that I had always known as weeds became plants with names both conjectural and provocative.

Through Miss Octa's influence I came to know bee balm and sidesaddle flowers, the joe-pye, the mouse-ear and the horse-heal. I got on reasonably good terms with ratsbane and goats rue. I learned there were 125 species of goldenrod and how many of them were found in the park. When I told her that my Southern eyes had never seen the trailing arbutus, she led me unerringly to a rocky ledge, brushed away the dead leaves and there it was, lovely and very rare.

Miss Octa loved the park in all its varying moods; she rejoiced in its changing seasons and welcomed each with unvarying enthusiasm and bountiful quotations from her inexhaustible stock of poetry.

Last fall as we stood looking down on the splendor of the trees she sighed, shook her gaunt, gray head with a murmur about "autumnal leaves that strew the brooks of Vallombrosa."

• • • •

And now the year is ready to shift the scene again for the third act of the continuous play. But when the trees begin to moult their gold and scarlet Miss Octa will not be there. She will be indoors keeping the apartment neat and cooking for the children. But she will still have her poets, I suppose.

One of them has foretold that in the land of tomorrows we are given back that which we most loved here. I hope so. When Miss Octa's time is up, I hope they open wide to her 'those ever flowing meads of asphodels' and tell her to walk right in and make herself at home.

Koka-Kudos.

To the Editor of The Post— Sir: In re editorial of August 15: Your "Coca-Choler" was a refreshing drink, with a dash of lemon to make us think, and humor enough to put a kink into the loveliest legal logic.

As the heat wave surges over us, is it any wonder they made a fuss to decide whether Pepsi or Cola's the cuss who'll tickle our terrible thirst? I think you should have a case of both free, for yours is the best "ad" I ever did see, and I think all readers agree with me—though hereafter I'll just order a "coke."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

On Knowing Your Mind.

BOBBY STAPP, the 13-year-old son of a sea cook, has just finished his fourth cruise as a stowaway and is now in the hands of the law as a parole violator. He stowed away to Europe twice, then to Savannah, and this time to the Caribbean on a 16-day cruise of the Santa Elena. His father follows the sea as ship's cook, and a keen psychologist might judge from the boy's conduct that he wants to be a sailor of some kind himself. It is just an idea, but worth exploring.

Now, it would be easy enough to sneer it through, sarcastic to the bottom of this page, but I think I will change needles and remark that it is, in words of one syllable, a hell of a note when the law assumes that a kid is somehow crazy and wayward because at the age of 13 he has decided what he wants to do in life and reveals impatience to get started.

The British Merchant Marine takes younger boys than Bobby Stapp into training ships for brief preliminary teaching in the manners and languages of the sea, and soon has them aboard sea boats bound just everywhere. The British Navy, too, accepts, or did accept up to the time of the Big War children who wanted to make a career of the sea.

• • • •

JUST HOW useful boys may be on men-of-war, whether they get in the way or need babying, I have no knowledge beyond a recollection of one conspicuous case of childish heroism in the Battle of Jutland, in which a powder-monkey named Jack Cornwell, holding the rate of boy, stood to the gun which he was helping to serve after a German shell had blown up the gun and most of the men working the piece. Some brass-hat, Jellico or Beatty, saw him there, mortally wounded himself, but waiting to carry on gave him a paragraph in the official report and put him up for a Victoria cross, which the boy never saw, because he died of his injuries. The Cornwell V. C. and the story of the youngster's courage made great patriotic propaganda in Britain—and the government of a nation which knows more than a few odds and ends about seafaring certainly drummed up the idea that when a boy is big enough he's old enough for the sea.

But the Stapp boy was marked for queer when he returned from his second voyage to Europe and was turned over to a psychiatrist to have his head felt, on the assumption that a boy with a definite ambition needed curing. Now he is in the hands of the children's court and as a parole breaker at that, and would seem to be nicely on his way to immurement with a lot of little thieves and slobbering sex-queeries who might exert a wholesome influence and correct his abnormal yearning to ride boats.

HE HAS a good report in all other respects, being bright, polite and fluent in two languages, and although it might be rather hard on his mother to lose him to the sea so soon, this country is crowded with the proud descendants of boys who ran away to sea at about the same age a few generations ago. It seems that there are some boys who feel the call so strongly that they just can't stand it off.

The irony of the case is that in all our schools educators put in their time year after year splashing education over hundreds of thousands of intelligent and amiable young drifters who haven't the faintest idea what they expect to do for a living after the meter readings say they have been educated up to the mark and are ready to go out and try. The pedagogues use cunning wiles to draw them out, and special boards of yen-detectives call in rather well-grown pupils—still in school at an age when their grandparents were raising families—to tickle their imagination and search their responses for views to their aptitudes.

• • • •

AND SO every year thousands of them are dumped out of school, too highly taught for strong-back jobs, but with no preference between one line of work and another, just so the hours aren't too long and the pay is enough to permit of early marriage. This is not to ridicule the misfortune of the poor children who never give a thought to the future or who think of it but can't concentrate on one ambition. But there is hardly any need to heap ridicule on a mental habit of those who are supposed to know something about youth who hold that a boy with a craving for a particular calling must be loaded to the plimsoll with useless lessons and branded incorrigible for a show of adventurous initiative.

Mexico Granted Water To Irrigate Cotton Crop

Government officials said yesterday Mexico's request for diversion of water from the Rio Grande to aid Mexican cotton farmers has been granted.

The request, made by Ambassador Francisco Castillo Najera, had been forwarded by the State Department to the international boundary commission at El Paso, Tex. Officials said the water was merely an advance on Mexico's September supply, to relieve a drought in the Juarez Valley cotton area, and would deprive no Americans of their usual supply.

Air Carriers Ordered To File Rates, Pacts

The Civil Aeronautics Authority announced yesterday that air carriers will be given until October 3 to file copies of tariffs showing rates, fares and charges for air transportation, and pooling and other agreements.

Clarification.

There appears to be some misunderstanding about the attitude of the Registry and Naturalization employes who are about to be booted from their air-cooled quarters on the fifth floor of the Labor Building. If their attitude had been other than what it is, then, indeed, it would be hard to understand.

They have not—so far as this column knows—tried to "tell" anybody where they are to be moved or when. They merely have expressed chagrin and some bewilderment at the order which suddenly, and without any explanation, gives them the alternative of taking the windowless sixth floor or a garage on Fourteenth street. That they reacted so mildly is the extraordinary thing—as we shall demonstrate.

• • • •

They had, for several years, been ensconced on the comfortable fifth floor of the pleasant Labor Building. They were a part of the rooftree. Then, of an almost miraculous sudden somebody comes up the steps with a piece of paper, notifying them that on an undetermined date they go upstairs or to the garage. If there were a few sighs and even some exclamations of indignation, it is to ask what else could be expected.

• • • •

It is difficult to see how, under these conditions, the employes could have closed their eyes. No man who has been sitting in a cushion chair is going to act pleasantly when asked to surrender the chair and go sit on a tack. They might have accepted the dictum with much less of good grace.

And particularly so, since many of them think, behind closed lips, that politics had much to do with the moving order. They suspect that the Wage-Hour Division, which will inherit the air-cooled and sumptuous fifth floor, had pull somewhere. They think all this criss-cross moving will cost the Government more than it would cost to install (or park) the Wage-Hour Division in the garage. They figure that it costs more to move two units than one.

And there has been no explanation, other than "the Government is always moving." Even this has been an unofficial explanation. So why wonder if the Registry and Naturalization employes dared to become a little sore?

Notes.

Marion Hepburn, whose sister is Katharine of the movies, left the U. F. W. A. headquarters yesterday after a stay of several weeks, during which she set up a legislative index and bibliography, and wrote a very charming human-interest story on the doings of the Civil Liberties Committee. Miss Hepburn has one more year in school and her plans after graduation are undeveloped. Our spy at the U. F. W. A. headquarters says that a gent from Harvard drove up yesterday in a car and carried Miss Hepburn off . . .

For two long years, WPA people have fought for reclassification, and now it seems in sight, at least. The U. F. W. A. has conferred with Deputy Administrator Aubrey Williams, who spoke assuringly. Williams also is pictured as desirous of civil service status for all WPA workers, and is hopeful that the end can be accomplished . . .

Meanwhile, the A.F.G.E. is framing some bills to help the executive orders of June 24 help more people. President Stengle has asked the Social Security Board and other agencies to follow the Tariff Commission's high example by bringing expert personnel under civil service, and the American Bar Association backs the principle in these words of a resolution:

". . . It is the duty of the bar to uphold the merit system in public employments; to seek its wider adoption and better enforcement in national, State and local governments; to demonstrate its applicability to legal positions in the public service; to attract young lawyers to a career of holding legal positions in such service, and to increase confidence in administrative agencies on the basis of such agencies being officered and staffed by persons appointed because of merit and divorced from suspicion of political influence."

The thirtieth annual meeting of the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada will be held here at the Wardman Park Hotel, October 17 to 21 inclusive, and the timing is perfect. The meeting will bring civil service experts from far and wide to the scene of a great civil service enterprise, the application of the June 24 executive orders. The meeting will be in session a short while after administrative heads have notified the President on the number of their employes to be brought in or kept out of civil service. The reaction of the assembly to the results of the executive orders, as these results are discernible in October, will be interesting. The assembly will be right on the ground for a good look.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Economic Reckoning.

Paris, August 19.

IN SPITE of all the efforts to isolate the various nations economically and to make national well-being depend upon domestic policy alone, the recession which began in America a year ago has become general in Europe. It is plainly evident not only in England and France, but in the severely controlled economic systems of Germany and Italy.

Although the symptoms of the trouble are very different in these various countries, and although the immediate causes are not the same, it is clear, I think, that the same fundamental and ultimate cause is operating in all of them. For one reason or another the peoples are not producing enough wealth to pay for the armaments that political conditions require, and for the social services and the social benefits that the masses of the people have been taught to expect. The nations are living beyond their real income and using up their accumulated capital to pay their current expenses. One and all, they are arriving at the point where they must either produce more real wealth or submit to a reduction in the popular standard of life.

IN EACH of the four principal European powers, leaving Russia aside, the warning signals are clearly visible. In Germany there is a spectacular fall in security prices on the Berlin Stock Exchange, and in view of the stringent control of the dictatorship, this is far more significant than it would be in the United States. In Italy there is not only a noticeable impoverishment of the people but rather clear evidence that the Fascist state does not know where to turn next for supplies to maintain its armaments. In France the trouble manifests itself as a deficit in the state budget accompanied by a disposition to hoard gold. In Great Britain it takes the form of a cyclical depression after a great boom.

But the underlying cause is the same in all these countries. They are either working at full speed, as in Germany, but devoting too much of their work to military and to party purposes, that is to uneconomic ends; or they are working too little, as in France and England, to earn what the people and the government consume.

• • • •

THUS, IN FRANCE there has been since 1936 a great increase of industrial wages accompanied by a decrease in the hours of work. In other words, the cost of producing industrial goods has been drastically raised. It has been raised beyond the point at which industry can earn a profit at current prices. Yet it is out of profits that the government has to obtain the revenues to pay for armaments and the social services. Unable to obtain enough revenues, the government budget shows a great deficit, and this deficit causes capitalists to withdraw their money from industry and to hoard it in the form of gold. This, in turn, aggravates the depression.

The necessary, the inevitable and the only remedy for excessive costs of production is to lower the costs of production. This can be done in one of two ways. Wages can theoretically be reduced by agreement. But for obvious reasons this is politically impossible. So the only alternative is to raise prices, and, thus, by making money have less purchasing power, to reduce real wages.

Three times the French have been forced to start along this path, that is to say, to accept successive devaluations of the franc. But after each devaluation the political pressure of organized labor and of the bureaucracy has compelled the government of the day to nullify the consequences of the devaluation. Though devaluation is nonsense unless it does raise prices, the government has been compelled to take punitive measures to prevent devaluation from raising prices.

The French difficulty arises, therefore, out of the fact that at a time when the nation must spend enormous sums on the national defense, the industrial workers insist on more leisure, and at the same time more real income than the French economic system is at present capable of providing. Though France is a relatively rich country, it is not rich enough to afford armaments, social services, a 200 per cent increase in hourly wages, a short working week and many holidays.

• • • •

THE GERMANS, on the other hand, are using all the powers of their dictatorship to compel the people to work long hours at low wages. But the wealth produced by this forced labor is not being ploughed back into the plant which produces German wealth. It is being used for the army and for showy public works and for the purposes of the Nazi Party and the political regime. The Germans are fully employed. But like the drudges who built the pyramids in Egypt, they work but they do not enrich the people. They support a gigantic army and a gigantic government which together make ever-increasing levies upon the real income of the nation.

This process of exploitation and expropriation could go on more or less indefinitely if it were not that Germany must obtain essential raw materials in the outer world. If so much of German labor and capital were not conscripted for military and other unproductive purposes, Germany could buy these materials by exporting German manufactures. The raw material producing countries would be only too glad to sell to them. But the Nazi system prevents the Germans from paying for the imports by manufacturing enough goods for export. Therefore, as Germany approaches the point where she cannot buy materials, she turns more and more to the notion of obtaining them by conquest.

The materials she needs exist in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania and Southern Russia, and that is one of the principal reasons, perhaps the principal reason, why the Nazi pressure toward these regions is so great. For unless Germany can obtain these resources by force, she must buy the materials she needs. And she cannot buy them in sufficient quantity as long as her people have to work for the army and for the state rather than for the export of commercial goods.

• • • •

THE BRITISH POSITION is more complicated and the difficulties are less pressing. In very much milder form the British position resembles the German in that Britain must spend enormous sums on armaments and is hampering her export trade by her experiments in tariffs and economic nationalism, and it is like the French in that the cost of production is very high, relative to her real wealth, owing to the pressure of the trades unions and the cost of the social services.

• • • •

DIFFICULT AS IT is to forecast the outcome, one prediction seems fairly clear. The expenditure on armaments will not decrease for the present. Therefore, there will have to be readjustments elsewhere, and, whatever the outward form, the substance will be a reduction in the popular standard of life.

• • • •

For there is no escaping the fact that nations cannot consume more than they produce. No national mysticism and no kind of political demagoguery can suspend that inexorable law.

"This Hemisphere."

"We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration, and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by an European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

(The passage above is from the historic message of President James Monroe to the Eighteenth Congress of the United States, December 2, 1823. See Barnet Nover's discussion in adjoining column of the Monroe Doctrine in relation to President Roosevelt's Canadian speeches.)

A Good Show

By Mark Sullivan

Presidential Virtuosity

IN THAT press conference in which President Roosevelt blacklisted Senator Tydings and Representative O'Connor, certain minor incidents conveyed some illumination. The conference was much like the one on February 5, 1937, when Mr. Roosevelt introduced his proposal to change the Supreme Court. In both conferences Mr. Roosevelt was conscious of "putting on a good show" and therefore was in high spirits. In both, he was conscious that his audience, a hundred or so newspaper men, were impressed, and that, too, gave him pleasure. Always the newspaper men like a good show. Reporters of politics, like reporters of prizefights, baseball, or other sports, appreciate a player who knows his game and plays it well.

Mr. Roosevelt read his statement to the newspaper men, for sheer pleasure in the reading one must assume. For the statement was already in mimeographed form and would be put in the hands of the newspaper men as they left the room. For the sake of dramatic suspense Mr. Roosevelt did not say until the end that what he was reading was a newspaper editorial which he was indorsing as his own view. At one point he interpolated. A strong sentence in the text read: "In American politics, any one can attach himself to a party whether he believes in the program or not." Mr. Roosevelt read that "con amore" as the music term for "with feeling" goes. Then he interpolated, with obvious pleasure, "That's a hot one."

• • • •

AFTER THE READING, however, when the newspapermen asked questions, there were some queries which slightly disturbed Mr. Roosevelt's mood of satisfaction. Mr. Roosevelt's statement had emphasized adherence to the party platform as his test of a Democratic Senator's rectitude. But someone ungraciously recalled that Mr. Roosevelt's court measure was not in the party platform. Mr. Roosevelt was obliged to admit that was so. The atmosphere was chilled a little when everybody realized that, with Senator George's vote against the court proposal omitted, extremely little was left of the indictment against him, for actually Mr. George supported some nine-tenths of the New Deal measures. Indeed, it could fairly be stated that Mr. George voted for practically every New Deal measure that was identical with any pledge in the Democratic platform.

One newspaperman, seeking interesting details, asked Mr. Roosevelt if he had received many telegrams and letters about his speech against Senator George, and how the messages were distributed as between approval and disapproval. That question threw Mr. Roosevelt off; obviously he had not anticipated it. Had the question been expected, one guesses there would have been many messages, for Mr. Roosevelt and those about him know the art of stimulating "fan mail," and in the past have occasionally exploited the quantity received. On some occasions the White House has given it out that many thousands of messages were received.

• • • •

IN THE PRESENT INSTANCE Mr. Roosevelt was obliged to say there hadn't been many messages, only 10 or 15. That number is very small; almost any newspaper or commentator would receive more about statements less important. Somewhat lamely Mr. Roosevelt said he supposed it was too hot for people to write letters. Yet, without knowing anything about it, one would feel safe in guessing that Senator George received many times 10 or 15 letters and telegrams. However, let us not make a point of that. One of the many fallacies current in the United States is that which assumes the stature of a political leader, like the talent of a screen actress, is in proportion to the quantity of fan mail received by each.

But is there any significance in the fact that Mr. Roosevelt received only 10 or 15 messages about his speech blacklisting Senator George? Is the country a little stunned? If not by the George speech alone, by the cumulative effect of many startling actions and developments in various fields? Perhaps by general conditions that are beginning to emerge to sight?

The country would be appalled, if the country understood some of the conditions. By testimony before a Congressional investigating committee, it is shown that through action along many fronts, the country is being taken toward the Communist order of society and government. The areas in which the movement is going forward include, if the testimony is accurate, some schools, some labor circles, some church circles, part of the press, some areas within government itself. If a million Soviet soldiers were on American soil to impose on us the Communist form of society and government, America would realize what was under way. Yet the movement to take America toward the Communist conception, as indicated by the Congressional investigation, is going forward more effectively than a million Soviet soldiers could accomplish. Soldiers we would see and resist and drive out. The influences actually at work are in many cases secret, or carried on under camouflage, or are otherwise difficult for the people to recognize.

More Than Neighbors

By Barnet Nover

Canada And The United States.

AT Kingston, Ontario, this week President Roosevelt stated the obvious with such vigor as to make it sound novel and even revolutionary. "The people of the United States," he said, "will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire."

Many will regard this statement as both true and gratuitous; true because our security would be endangered were a hostile power, with an ideology at variance with our own, to gain a foothold on our northern border; gratuitous because nobody is threatening Canada at the present time, and, anyway, because the Canadians may feel they are entirely capable of defending themselves.

• • • •

THE ENTHUSIASTIC reception which Mr. Roosevelt's remarks have received from press and public in Canada suggests, however, that Canadians are not taking an unduly complacent view of their situation.

At the present juncture of world affairs no nation feels wholly safe from the threat of war and invasion. Certainly we do not, as is proved by the fact that we are spending vast sums to build up our Navy, Army and air force. And Canada does not feel wholly safe, either.

To be sure, as a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, Canada enjoys the protection of the British fleet. But the effectiveness of such protection depends on many unknowns, most important of which is Britain's capacity to dominate the seas in the event of another major war. Were the British fleet rendered helpless, the security of every part of the British Commonwealth of Nations would thereby be greatly diminished. The President's remarks, therefore, appear to Canadians as valuable reinsurance.

• • • •

IN CONNECTION with the President's remarks the point is being widely made that its effect is to extend to Canada the protection afforded by the Monroe Doctrine. This Mr. Roosevelt has denied. But, as it happens, both the assertion and the denial are somewhat beside the point.

The Monroe Doctrine happens to be about the foggiest of our international policies. Since it was proclaimed on December 2, 1823, it has been made to mean everything and nothing. It has not always inhibited aggressions in this hemisphere by European powers and it certainly has not inhibited aggressions by the United States.

It has meant different things to different Administrations so that while under Theodore Roosevelt it was made to sanctify the policy of the "big stick," under Franklin Roosevelt it has been endowed with the attributes of "the good neighbor."

But underlying all the various interpretations of the Monroe Doctrine there has been one unchanging fact: The determination of the United States to prevent this hemisphere from being drawn into the European balance of power system and from being made the object of European imperialism. In this particular the Monroe Doctrine would have existed in fact, during the past hundred-odd years even had there been no President by the name of Monroe and no "doctrine" bearing his name.

• • • •

BUT the United States has not been the only nation responsible for the successful execution of that policy. If it was to our interest to keep the Americas safe from European aggression it was to Great Britain's interest as well. And until America's coming of age as a world power it can fairly be said that the principal support which the Monroe Doctrine received came from Britain and the British fleet.

At any rate the United States and Great Britain have pursued in this hemisphere a consistent parallelism of policy. For that reason Canada, being both an American nation and a part of the British Empire, enjoyed the dual protection of Great Britain and the United States and also served as a bridge between British and American interests.

• • • •

GREAT BRITAIN is at a crossroads of her destiny. She may emerge from the present crisis with her security assured, her empire unimpaired and her ties with the other members of the British Commonwealth of Nations strengthened rather than weakened.

There is no certainty of this, however. The British ruling class, in part at least, appears to have lost its once profound sense of empire. Long-range considerations are being subordinated to temporary aims. The result may be ruin rather than safety.

Not for nothing, then, does President Roosevelt speak of a threat to Canada "by any other empire." And his remarks also indicate that, for better or for worse, the fate of this hemisphere is somehow wrapped up with the fate of Great Britain and the British Empire. Should that empire crack up, should the British fleet be destroyed, the position of the United States and of the other nations of this hemisphere would become more parlous. More than ever the nations of the New World would then be compelled to draw closer together for mutual protection in the hope that in so doing they keep this hemisphere, in the President's words, "a citadel wherein civilization can flourish unimpaired."

Pay-Hour Chief Flays Textile Wage Slashes

Andrews Hits at Policy as He Maps Program for Industry.

Buckling down to business swiftly, Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews yesterday began mapping the scope of a textile wage committee's work, first chore in the vast, intricate task of setting up minimum wages and maximum hours for the masses.

Andrews paused only to denounce wage cutting in textile industries as "economically unsound and very unfair to labor" before proceeding to organize a 12-man group of textile experts into a conference on that industry's problems.

His ire aroused by reports of wage cutting by industries endeavoring to hack their hourly rates down toward the 25-cents-an-hour minimum required in an automatic provision of the new law, Andrews commented tersely: "I had high hopes this would not be attempted."

Andrews said that the committee would be named and its work outlined in a week. Donald M. Nelson, vice president, Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, will be chairman. Nelson and Andrews agreed yesterday that the textile committee probably would cover rayon, silk and cotton, with wool set up under another committee.

Three months was set as the probable time limit for establishment of definite standards in the textile industry. Drafting a definition marking the committee's boundaries will come first, according to Andrews, who indicated that the industrial committees will be held to moderate size, in the interests of efficiency.

The meeting was attended by John Abt, Textile Workers' Organizing Committee, New York; Miss Irene Blunt, National Federation of Textiles, Inc., New York; Roy A. Cheney, Underwear Institute, New York; C. W. Dall, president of the National Rayon Weavers Association, New York; Goldthwaite H. Dorr, cotton Textile Institute, Washington; R. E. Henry, Duncan Mills, Greenville, S. C.; Sidney Hillman, general president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, New York; Fred Morrison, counsel, and Claudius Murchison, Cotton Textile Institute, Washington; H. A. Schrader, International Association of Machinists, Washington; Robert T. Stevens, J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., New York; Robert West, Dan River Cotton Mills, Danville, Va.

Hoover Shifts Seven G-Men To New Posts

Coulter Sent From Capital to Des Moines; Four Trade Local Jobs.

J. Edgar Hoover yesterday shifted seven agents of the F. B. I. across the country.

Four agents in charge of local offices traded stations with each other, while ranking G-men in Kansas City and Des Moines were assigned to special duty. R. C. Coulter, special agent in Washington, was ordered to Des Moines as agent in charge.

Described as "routine" at bureau headquarters, the changes are designed to familiarize agents with special problems of criminal investigation in various sections of the country, at the same time making available particular qualifications of individual officers to more than one locality.

The assignments made public yesterday include:

W. G. Banister, assistant agent in charge at Newark, N. J., to Butte, Mont., as agent in charge; H. E. Anderson, agent in charge at Butte, Mont., to Little Rock, Ark., as agent in charge; H. B. Fletcher, agent in charge at Little Rock, Ark., to Oklahoma City as agent in charge; E. P. Guinane, agent in charge at Oklahoma City, to Kansas City as agent in charge; Dwight Brantley, agent in charge at Kansas City, to Washington, D. C., for special assignment, and L. M. Chipman, agent in charge at Des Moines, to special duty.

Hull Establishes Bureau of World Communications

By the Associated Press.

Establishment of a new Division of International Communications in the State Department, in recognition of developments in this field, was announced yesterday by Secretary Hull.

Thomas Burke, who has been chief of Specialties Division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, was named chief of the new division, with Jesse E. Saugstad, of State Department staff, as assistant chief.

Setting up of the new division was described by Secretary Hull as last of a series of major changes which have been made in organization of the department in the last 18 months.

The Secretary said the division would handle international aspects of problems connected with telecommunications (radio, cable, telegraph and telephone communication), aviation and shipping."

Woodruff Attacks Executive 'Politics'

Representative Woodruff (Republican), of Michigan, in a statement yesterday raised the question whether the White House was preparing to "play politics" with profits from the syndication of prefaces to President Roosevelt's "Public Papers and Addresses" by announcing the public purpose to which they will be devoted at a strategic moment prior to the November elections.

The statement, issued through the Republican National Committee, said:

"It is a shame that the White House must play politics with everything it touches, no matter how noble."

Examiner Quits In Weirton Case

By the Associated Press.

The National Labor Relations Board disclosed yesterday that the Weirton Steel Co. hearing in Pittsburgh had been postponed again, until September 12, and that Trial Examiner Edward G. Smith had been relieved of the case.

Smith, former West Virginia circuit judge and university trustee, was the storm center in the Weirton case recently when the Labor Board decided to exclude Weirton's general counsel, Clyde A. Armstrong, from the hearing because of alleged contemptuous conduct.

A board official, who declined to be quoted, said Smith had been relieved at his own request.

McKellar Sees Roosevelt Justified on 'Purges'

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Senator McKeller (Democrat), of Tennessee, sailed on the liner Santa Barbara on a South American cruise today with R. P. Clift, Tennessee deputy WPA administrator.

McKellar said he thought President Roosevelt was justified in trying to influence State elections to get a favorable Congress.

Ex-Envoy Advises Tourists to Shun 'Authority' Pose

New Lork, Aug. 19 (AP).—American tourists who spend a few weeks in Europe and come back as "authorities" on the political situation would "far better keep still and not offer so many expert opinions," Cyrus E. Woods said today as he returned with Mrs. Woods from Europe. Woods has been U. S. Ambassador to Spain and Japan.

The Once Over

Elmer On Big Game Extermination.

"Fresco, California-Thomas Rose, rancher foreman, spied a coyote lurking near his ranch house. A beer bottle was handy, so he let fly. The bottle clipped the animal behind the ear. It fell dead."—News item.

• • • •

Well, I always did like my beer in bottles instead of in cans," declared Elmer Twitchell, veteran big game hunter, astrologer and stamp collector, today, as he read the above item.

• • • •

Bottled beer is always better in an emergency, in one of those tight moments in life," continued Elmer, "and what happened to that Fresno coyote proves it again. The trouble with canned beer is that you can't get a grip on it. Just suppose Tom Rose had had nothing but canned beer when that wild animal sneaked up on him; it would have been no contest!

• • • •

"No matter what wind-up you use, or what style of delivery, you can't get the power behind a can of beer that you can get behind a bottle. And when you're pitching to a Wildcat you've gotta have plenty of force as well as accuracy. Why, a coyote can stand and let you bounce canned beer off his bean all night!

"But a bottle is different. People have been getting speed, distance and power from bottles for years and years. As an old animal hunter and big-game man, I ain't claiming you can always kill a coyote this way, of course. It usually stuns him for an hour or so, after which a coyote gets up and goes unsteadily off to raid some camp where the dude ranchers from the city are dependent entirely on canned beer.

• • • •

"When I was in the African lion country I frequently used to drive off lions and tigers with beer bottles. It's no trouble. But you can't get results against black panthers that way. No, sir. I always use a whisky bottle against black panthers. And I prefer the pinch bottle at distances closer than 50 yards. Did I ever tell you about the time I rounted a herd of elephants, using pre-war gin?

• • • •

"That was an experience, but I won't go into details. You remember that pre-war gin. We always carried it in gallon jugs. After two swigs I could throw that gallon jug 500 yards with deadly accuracy. Why? Just to hear the explosion! Huh? What happened to the elephant herd? Say, that gallon landed right smack in the center of it and all we found of the entire herd next morning was part of an ear and one tusk!"

Lively Comedy Scores Laughs At the Earle

Ace Cast and Stage Acts Compile a Swiftly Paced Program.

"GIVE ME A SAILOR." Paramount picturization of a stage play by Anne Nichols, adapted to the screen by Doris Anderson and Frank Butler, featuring Martha Raye, Bob Hope, Betty Grable and Jack Whiting, with Clarence Kolb, J. C. Nugent, Bonnie Jean Churchill and Nana Bryant. Directed by Elliott Nugent. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At the Earle Theater.

Who says that beauty's everything? Or that much-promoted glamour is, either, for that matter? Both must be the malarkey, for our prize funny girl, Martha Raye, proves up as the heart interest of Bob Hope in "Give Me a Sailor," at the Earle Theater.

To complicate things further, "boo-ful" and blonde Betty Grable is shown up as a minor villainess, being given only the last 50 feet or so of the film for regeneration. True, Betty's misdoings are limited to fast flirtation technique, stealing Sister Martha's pretty frocks and, worst of all, burning rainbow trout black instead of cooking them to a dainty turn.

This Martha Raye-Bob Hope combination is really a natural. Some one in Hollywood had an inspiration, but definitely. Young Master Hope, smart and funny as all get-out, is the one cinema lad (outside of Bing Crosby) who could play opposite the Raye gal and not get swamped, bogged down and, finally, completely inundated by Raye high-and-low-jinks. From this critic's angle, it looked as though Bob had the edge on Martha pretty often in laugh-provoking ability.

Story Is "Nutsy."

The picture's story is simply a nutsy fantasy, circa 1938. There are two brothers, both naval officers—two sisters, one, Martha, homely but a swell cook, and Betty, a bit of a junior Jezebel. You've guessed it—both of the brothers are in love with Betty. But you won't guess that Martha's in love with the older brother, Jack Whiting. Nor will you ever be able to guess the plot windings that finally give the choice of either brother to Martha. The suspense is built up so artfully that even the canniest picturegoers will find it hard to figure out even the approximate wind-up. Credit for this should probably go largely to Director Elliott Nugent, who was an actor himself, and a smart one, not so long ago.

The laughs are as thick as blackberries in a properly made blackberry pie. There's the big moment when Martha finds out that her beauty clay has set like cement. As Master Hope remarks, she looks like "a bad job of embalming." You'll like it, too, when Bob jars her mask loose with a handsome upper-cut—delivered in a purely helpful spirit. The pair are also pretty much of a panic in their 1938 version of bedroom comedy. The cause of rural fun is served by the Martha-Bob picnic, interrupted by a drove of nomadic and ravenous pigs.

Long wave the Ray-Hope funning team! And may they have even better material. They deserve the best.

Stage Acts Score.

Ozzie Nelson, with his orchestra, and Harriet Hilliard divide the stage show honors on a fairly 50-50 basis. We think the percentage would have been tipped on the Hilliard side if the audience could have had all the Hilliard songs it evidently desired.

For Harriet Hilliard is more than a top-flight singer—meaning that if she weren't such a fine singer she would be a leading actress. She takes that gay little ditty, "The Guy in the Three-Cornered Pants," and puts more real tenderness into it than is to be found in any dozen wishy-washy "mother songs" you've ever heard. From a different angle, she enriches the too-frequently misused "Music, Maestro, Please."

Evelyn Poe, a mighty promising young singer, is also introduced by Maestro Nelson. She and the orchestra co-operate too comically in "The Love Bug Will Bite You If You Don't Watch Out."

Ozzie Nelson's music has its usual polished swing, especialy well demonstrated in operatic music from "Martha" done in hot rhythm.

Frank Paris' Marionettes proved plenty diverting, garnered heavy applause. They included Dancer Zorina, Dopey the Dwarf and, best of all, Sonja Henie, Fritz and Jean Hubert present a tremendously funny inebriate turn, demonstrating some of the most rascally tricks. They must have taken some jiu jitsu technic and comicalized it.

Columbia

"Love Finds Andy Hardy" is a rare picture in that it can be recommended to the entire family for its humor, its perfect mirroring of family life and its faultless portrait of an adolescent boy in the throes of young love. The boy is Mickey Rooney and his lady loves are fair and the fairest of the trio is Judy Garland.

Judy is our choice of the subdeb field, of which the movie industry has a blossoming plenty. She has a gentle sort of loveliness, a mature singing voice, no tricks, and an endearing sort of little-girl glow. Mickey is that odd mixtture of bravado and softness which makes 15-year-old boys so fascinating. Their trials will be amusing and bring on a mellow sort of nostalgia which may be just what you need in this weather.

Gene Reynolds, as a problem boy who finds himself as an amateur radio-er, is responsible for one of the best short sequences in any movie lately—mostly for the lesson which bothered parents might possibly draw from it. Lewis Stone, as the judge, continues his series of portraits of a father such as any boy would be proud to claim. Fay Holden is the mother and between them they make Andy Hardy's growing-up a pleasure, even with the maximum amount of growing pains, which would be, of course, the lot of an Andy portrayed by young Mickey Rooney.

Best of the shorts is a Pete Smith specialty showing how lifeguards qualify for their jobs. A semiscientific short about sleeping sickness has brief interest and some good photography. In the news you may see the President at Barnesville, Ga., and a glimpse of the leading figure in the New York trial of Boss Hines.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

A Crisp, Domestic, Comedy-Drama, 'Going Native' Revue Pack Capitol

Well-Balanced Bill Offers Diversified, Light Entertainment.

"WOMAN AGAINST WOMAN." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the story, "Enemy Territory," by Margaret Culkin Banning, adapted to the screen and produced by Edward Chodorov, starring Virginia Bruce, Herbert Marshall and Mary Astor, with Janet Beecher, Marjorie Rambeau, Juanita Quigley, Zeffie Tilbury, Sarah Padden, Betty Ross Clarke, Dorothy Christy, Morgan Wallace nad Joseph Crehan. Directed by Robert B. Sinclair. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

BELL.

It is a smooth-running and colorful revue that Gene Ford and Chester Hale have contrived from the wealth of resident material submitted for their appraisal in the sixth annual production of "Going Native," this week's stage attraction at Loew's Capital Theater.

The stage settings and costumes are as spectacular and as tasteful as any that might be found in a "big-time" attraction headed for a metropolitan run. The Washington talent revealed in the principal and subordinate roles has about it the poise and assurance of the professional theater. Yesterday's first performance, everything considered, was run off with exceptional polish and precision.

The chorus of 24 "line-girls" open the bill in a variety of dance routines that disclose the superior skill of Chester Hale, internationally known dance director, in fashioning ensemble effects that are uniformly animated and intricate, if not always unique. Their opening number is punctuated by a solo song interlude by Ellis "Tiny" Meeker, whose various contributions to the program mark its primary claim to comedy enlivement, and is quickly followed by a clever tap dance by Edward and Margaret Wise, who can step with the best of the professionals.

"Old Sol" Fools 'Em.

Lee Everett, master of ceremonies, is given a novel introduction, while a loudspeaker is spouting his recorded words into the auditorium, and he, in turn, immediately introduces the Lyons Twins, Lorraine and Miriam, gifted dancers, who toot their own "stop music" while tapping in perfect unison; Wilbur Hall, the "Navy Yard Cowboy," in lariat twirling and Australian whip-cracking stunts, and Earline King, a soprano, whose ballads lead directly into "In Spring," one of the most pretentious numbers in the revue, covering a wide span of years and embracing a comic surprise in a bustle conceit and a bit of sensationalism in a "Can Can" reminiscent of "The Three Waltzes," in which, incidentally, the "Can Can" was staged by Chester Hale, who has injected the same sort of speedy acrobatics here.

Milbourne Christopher offers a brief period of "illusive illusions" and is followed by Helen Forrest, a Washington songstress with a "blues" voice that bowled yesterday afternoon's standing-room audience completely over in "A Tisket, A Tasket," and forced her to take an encore and many bows. Lee Everett next does an individual monologue specialty that has its high spots of humor and affords a natural introduction of another show-stopping act in John Highsmith and his "five shades of rhythm," billed as "Rhapsodists in Four-and-a-half Street Time." This sepia quintet of swing wizards is composed of John Highsmith, Wendall Mason, Harold Frances, Sammy Woods and Billy Thompson, who practically wreck the place with piano, guitar, dulcimer, bass viol, voices and dancing.

The "Sleeping Beauty" finale contains a mild travesty on the reporting styles of the five local newspapers as an incidental fillip to a sterling spectacle of variegated song and dance that is a genuine dazzler.

The last-minute elimination of the Sylvia Kaplowitz Accordion Octet, through the operation of the District child labor law and the over-anxiety of two or three underage youngsters to be in the revue, regardless, deprived "Going Native" of a "flash" act that would have been an inevitable inclusion among the show-stoppers. This sixth "Going Native" is the most professional of the series, at that.

Screen Features Appropriate.

And the Capitol management has had the good judgment to bulwark its current entertainment with a series of screen subjects that add to, rather than detract from, the spirit of the week.

"Woman Against Woman," the major feature, is not a "big" picture, but it is an interesting and diverting one in which Virginia Bruce, Herbert Marshall and Mary Astor effectively impersonate the three angles of a marital triangle that brightens its divorce court theme with a steady flow of crisp and humorous dialogue. Important supporting roles are amply sustained by Marjorie Rambeau, Zeffie Tilbury, Janet Beecher, and the numerous others named in the diminutive type preceding these comments. Sympathetic sweethearts will not learn a great deal to their advantage from this subject, but "catty" wives, who run their patient husbands ragged with their self-centered and spiteful nagging, will.

A Fitzpatrick Technicolor travelogue to the recent Paris Exposition and Pete Smith's "Follow the Arrow," starring Howard Hill, champion archer, are picturesque and sprightly embellishments of a program that was heartily liked by yesterday's first enthusiastic crowd—not forgetting, of course, the new issue of the Fox Movietone News, with Lew Lehr going Cockney on us, instead of Teutonic. He probably felt that he had to show a change of pace to keep step with the rest of the bill.

Costly Paste.

Even paste diamonds come high in Hollywood. A handful of precious gems for a scene in "Suez," including replicas of some famous stones of history, cost 20th Century-Fox $1,200. Craftsmen spent several days on each imitation jewel.

Singer and Maestro Take a Bow

Hollywood, Aug. 19.

While Papa Louis Mayer and Harry Warner were outbidding each other for fine horseflesh at Saratoga, Darryl Zanuck and Tyrone Power took over New York and the rest of the country. Sure they're generous—didn't they share the spotlight one day with Doug Corrigan? But a week later, Corrigan walked through the streets of New York practically unrecognized.

While—the memory of "Alexander's Ragtime Band" lingers on. Why? Because it has spirit, beauty, faith and a heap o' living from everyone who contributed to it. Even the newsreels showing the Zanuck family returning from Europe were applauded. Yes, that's the success story of a simple American family. They have polo ponies and servants, but they also have love and understanding, and their motto is, one for all and all for one. It permeates the whole Twentieth Century lot.

I talked with a mutual friend of Tyrone's, who saw a great deal of him back East. He said the boy's level-headedness surprised him. Three telephones in his apartment were kept open. Had to put in an extra operator to take care of calls, because Ty didn't want to chance not speaking to anyone he had worked with when he was unknown, and whose name he might not remember.

He ate most of his meals at a little cafe on West Forty-fifth street, whose owner used to let him sign checks when he lacked the price of a meal, and helped him tack a sign above the front door, reading: "This is Tyrone Power's favorite restaurant." He didn't have his clothes torn off by fans, because he said to the crowds everywhere: "If you'll send your autograph books to the hotel I'll sign all of them." Two hours a day was spent doing that.

The president of his Boston fan club came to New York and gave him a scrap-book which she'd kept from the time he went into pictures. Tyrone took her to lunch and bought her a new book.

Ty came back a week before he was to present a bronze plaque commemorating the first performance in the Hollywood Bowl—"Julius Caesar," in which his father had played Brutus. The inscription on the plaque "For this was the noblest Roman of them all" written by Shakespeare—still good, is imbedded in a rock beside the pathway to the Bowl.

You've heard of the crowds at the Roxy on opening day. Lots of people inside sat through the picture three times. But did you know that hot coffee and doughnuts were served to those who waited?

Now M-G-M has seen the light and is making "Marie Antoinette" a continuous performance instead of a road show.

Great excitement at Henry Koster's the other day. Polly, their dachshund, became the mother of my Wolf's six black beauties—cutest things I ever saw. Mrs. Koster had a job keeping Henry from taking a moving picture of them right after birth. But he started the following day and is continuing. Not a lick of housework done because the maid, who has assisted similar blessed events, gave her entire attention to Polly. Koster received congratulatory telegrams from all his friends.

He's busy lining up Deanna Durbin's next picture, which goes into production in six weeks and will be the Christmas release. "D is certainly my lucky letter," said Koster, "because I run between Deanna and Danielle Darrieux." He has a grand idea for a W. C. Fields comedy. But the studio says, "No, you stick to glamor."

It's always a joy to see Bessie Lasky, especially when she's entertaining for Conductor Eugene Goossens and Singer Kullman. I met the brilliant sculptor, Felix Weiss, who modeled three English Kings—George, Edward, George. You know me, I had to ask him what they talked about. He said the sittings were too sacred to discuss. But he was amused at Lloyd George—who, while he sat for him, dictated to three secretaries and transacted two important bits of business, besides looking over his last week's receipts on his vegetable and berry stand—which seemed to interest him more than the League of Nations.

Mr. Weiss has just done a head of Luise Rainer in one sitting. She's an old friend. Next year he'll give a one-man show at Duveen's in New York. He's here only on a visit.

In praising a well-known authoress, her best friend said of her: "She's really wonderful, she brought the classics down to the mentality of the morons. And her late husband's one good deed was that he left her with memories and family tradition. But, had he lived another week, he'd have killed her."

McCarthy Cast.

The voice of Clem McCarthy, familiar to millions of sports fans over the radio, will be heard in "The Crowd Roars," story of the boxing rackets, starring Robert Taylor. McCarthy, in person, as well as his voice, will lend an added note of reality to boxing sequences of the picture.

Large Order.

Hollywood's largest single meat order in years was placed recently with a packing plant for banquet scenes in "If I were King," with Ronald Colman, Frances Dee and several hundred extras. Two thousand pounds of fore-quarter beef, full carcass lamb and game were included.

Hemingway Hit Is Revived on Screen at Met.

Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper Reappear as Co-stars of 'Farewell to Arms.

"A FAREWELL TO ARMS." Paramount picturization of the novel by Ernest Hemingway, adapted to the screen by Benjamin Glazer and Oliver H. P. Garrett, costarring Helen Hayes and Gary Cooper, with Adolphe Menjou, Mary Phillips, Jack LaRue, Blanche Friderici, Henry Armetta and George Humbert. A revival, reviewed Friday afternoon by Dorothea Lewis. At the Metropolitan Theater.

Another reissue, another fine love story, another Frank Borzage picture—that is becoming something of a usual and synonymous lineup.

Love stories—the rare, really good ones—seem to endure. Certainly pictures falling into that classification make up a large section of the best pictures of all time, now being so wisely reissued and widely welcomed. And Borzage, then and now, has few equals in directing tender, believable and memorable love stories. His "Man's Castle" has already been reissued; his "Three Comrades" is one of the most recent, and now comes "Farewell to Arms," one of the most memorable of all in its adult, heart-breaking story.

In it, author, director and actors have combined to give a motion picture great feeling, and a story of the grand passion much of reality. The love of the little English nurse and the tall American officer in the Italian ambulance corps was doomed to tragedy from the start, because it was set in a nightmare of a world. They met during an air raid, the guns at the front could be heard the first time they talked together, and hospitals, shell holes, blood and death were everyday realities to them. But tragic or not, their love idyl was a beautiful and an important one and one that has been made into a haunting picture. It has its happy moments.

Inspires Fine Acting.

Helen Hayes, of Washington, is one of the great actresses; Gary Cooper, of Montana, has never been our idea of "an actor of parts," but the two play here with equal strength and equal meaning, sincerity and conviction. Little Helen is not beautiful, but she is unforgettable — particularly her voice and eyes. And Gary attains an acting stature reaching into rarer altitudes than most of his other efforts, before or after. Perhaps he is helped by one of those Borzage secrets—not too much dialogue, enough effective pantomime.

The supporting cast is a distinguished one, including Mary Philips, excellent as Nurse Ferguson; Adolphe Menjou, not quite so colorful as we remembered him as Rinaldi, and Jack La Rue, very notable indeed in a reverent and rich portrait of a young priest who hates war. There are also Gilbert Emery, Blanche Friderici and Henry Armetta, less exuberant than he is today. All of them are enveloped in that particularly hazy, liquid, romantic sort of photography which Mr. Borzage likes so well.

Masterful Vignettes.

Hemingway's book is not new, but nothing more eloquent has been said against war than some of the tnings which he said in it, and some of the scenes in its picturization—the slow, pitiful, painful crawl of ambulances up the Italan mountainside; the moment in which Miss Barclay tells so simply what happened to her fiance; the funny, futile, needless, horrible bombing of the men eating cheese in their dugout—are casual-seeming, little masterpieces.

The subsidiaries include an interesting Technicolor short on "Unusual Occupations," featuring vivid shots of the age-old ceremony of changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace and surprise glimpses of Reginald Denny as a model-airplane expert. There are also the newsreel, a not-so-good Looney Tune, entitled "Porky's Spring Planting," and Clyde McCoy and his orchestra being very busy making music.

RKO-Keith's

"Letter of Introduction," Universal's unique combination of hilarious comedy and tragic drama, rounds into the stretch at RKO-Keith's Theater well out in front with the best of the present season's screen features.

The cast engaged in the exposition of this picture's story of aspiration, thwarted ambitions and tragic disappointments present well-nigh perfect embodiments of the serio-comic characters that might be found in any theatrical boarding house on the fringes of Broadway. The drama is primarily one of the theater, with a double-barreled tinge of romance added, and touches such extremes of comedy and pathos that a susceptible audience, perforce, must shed both tears of laughter and of sorrow.

The prime movers in the fun are Charlie McCarthy, Mortimer Snurd—two ridiculous young woodenheads—their mentor, Edgar Bergen; Ernest Cossart and Eve Arden. The more serious aspects of the comedy-drama are intrusted to Andrea Leeds, Adolphe Menjou, Ann Sheridan, Rita Johnson, George Murphy and numerous others.

The whole thing adds up to a fine hour or two of distinctive screen entertainment — especially when augmented by the latest issue of "The March of Time" and the other features of the bill that will be continued through Wednesday afternoon of next week only.

Wednesday night, "Carefree," costarring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, will be accorded its world premiere at Keith's.

Alice to Meet Tony Later on His Tour

A solid silver baton, with her name engraved on the side and a costly Gladstone bag, were Alice Faye's parting gifts to her husband, Tony Martin, when the latter left Hollywood for a ten-week personal-appearance tour through the country.

The lovely blonde star, currently heading an all-star cast in "By the Dawn's Early Light," expects to join her handsome husband and his own orchestra somewhere along his tour just as soon as she concludes her present assignment at the studio.

It is the first time that Tony and his wife have been separated since their romantic elopement and marriage at Yuma, Ariz., last September.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

Budapest, Aug. 19.

AT NOON the Douglas ship of the Royal Dutch Line lifted its nose into the clouds above Prague. One hour later it settled between the Austrian Alps and the Carpathian Mountains and crossed the Danube to the landing field at Vienna. We stepped out of the plane and set foot on German soil—for 20 minutes . . . An official took our passport and studied the transit visa issued by the German embassy in London.

• • • •

HE STAMPED IT "Grenzpolizeikommissariat, Wein, 30 VII, 38, Aus.," drew a red line through the word "Aus," and substituted a Swastika . . . We walked across the field, to rest in the shade of the airport's restaurant. Behind the wired fence sat groups of Viennese, young and old, staring at us—not coldly, as did the blond Teutons at Hamburg when, two years ago, we landed at that aerodrome from which a thousand Swastikas flew. But here in Vienna there were no red flags in the sky.

• • • •

THE OFFICIAL RETURNED our passport. Five minutes later we left Vienna. At 4 o'clock we sighted the hills of Buda and the flatlands of Pest. . . . And before dark that night we were walking along the Corso, on the shores of the brown waters of the Blue Danube.

• • • •

OUR CAMERAS, which were "lost" by the officials as soon as our plane crossed the German boundaries, had been "found" in Prague . . . The Europeans are very cautious about cameras. When the Cunard Line's new Mauretania was launched in England last week newspaper photographers were permitted to point their cameras in only one direction—toward the Mauretania . . . And the cameramen were ordered not to use wide-range lenses—because in the adjoining slipway a battleship was being built. And a few feet upstream the camera might have photographed a British destroyer.

• • • •

OUR HOTEL is on the river bank, on the site where Richard Wagner lived. It's a narrow, dead-end street, and the automobiles are rerouted by means of a turntable in the center of the street . . . Facing us, across the Danube, is the Citadel of Bunda, and the Royal Palace where Maria Theresa ruled . . . The most uncomfortable visitors here are the ladies of the rich, hinterland families, whose wealth is measured, despite the warm weather, by the number of petticoats they can afford to wear . . . The local Barbara Hutton wears 15.

• • • •

IN THE NEXT STREET is the Greek Orthodox Church, adjoining a new modernistic building now being completed. The top floor of the building is in the process of being removed, because it obstructs the view from the church's belfry. "This is radical," the architect agreed, "but religious."

• • • •

"WE ARE SUPPOSED to have an army of only 30,000 under the treaty," an army officer told us, "but Hungary has 200,000 men who have been trained for war . . . When the time is ripe we'll get our lands back . . . In Szabadsag Ter, we watched the Resurrection Service. In the center of the square is a landscaped map of Hungary—its present territory indicated by the light-green plants and the darker growth outlining the lands ceded to the Czechs, Jugoslavia and Rumania after the war.

• • • •

ENCIRCLING ALL THIS is the oath repeated every morning in the nation's schools: "I believe in One God, One Country, One Divine Eternal Justice. I believe in the Resurrection of Hungary" . . . And today, in Szabadsag, Ter., Budapest's Liberty Square, we saw the flag at half-staff, as a lament for her lost domains, while a thousand Magyars, with upraised hands, repeated that oath to restore to Hungary—by alignment with Germany—its prewar might and possessions.

• • • •

We went to the Malert Air Line office to make our reservations for the flight to Venice . . . The official telephoned the head office. "Lyons," he repeated into the mouthpiece. "L—like in Ladislaus; Y—like in Yakutsk; O—like in Olga; N—like in Napoleon, and S—like in Szabo.'

Palace

Robert Taylor continues to slug his way up to the contendership for the light-heavyweight title through a second week at Loew's Palace Theater.

In "The Crowd Roars," the handsome Mr. Taylor dispels any possible doubt that ever may have existed as to his right to a place among the most stalwart and most rugged of our screen heroes. His ring career begins when he is a small boy—portrayed in his younger years by Gene Reynolds, one of the cinema's most talented juvenile actors—being exploited for beer and whisky money by his broken-down, vaudeville-actor father. When Tommy McCoy gets well along into his 'teens, the role is taken over by Mr. Taylor, who thenceforth looks, acts and scraps like a professional fighter.

The play bristles with exciting ring action and provides the equivalent of two or three evenings of fisticuffing in Madison Square Garden. The plot is a well-ordered and sustained one, involving shady racketeers, beautiful young seminary girls and the usual roustabouts of the fight game. Excellent roles are splendidly played by Frank Morgan, as the tipsy father; Edward Arnold, as the king of the racketeers; Maureen O'Sullivan, as the "heart interest;" Lionel Stander, Emma Dunn, William Gargan, Jane Wyman, Nat Pendleton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Isabel Jewel, Charles D. Brown and many more.

The short subjects also are being held over with the feature.

Lop-sided Funster Cast in Naval Film

Another role that is a "natural" for him has been assigned Henry Armetta, master of comedy and dialect. Armetta will play the part of an excitable Italian mayor in "Wooden Anchors," the Twentieth Century-Fox nautical spectacle based on the exploits of America's World War fleet of submarine chasers.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Mocked and Scorned By Shrewish Wife, Should Conservative Husband Endure for Children's Sake?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a man of studious professional interests, who has been married for more than 20 years to a woman whom I met in the office. She comes of good family, an uncle having been a distinguished doctor, while another uncle is a prominent Army officer on the West Coast. However, her own cultural interests are not as broad as mine, although she has plenty of social aplomb.

We are involved in serious personal difficulties, due, I am convinced, almost entirely to her uncontrolled temper, unceasing criticism and sneering disbelief in anything in which I am interested. Possibly this is a defense against a feeling of cultural inferiority, although I am certain that I have never, by word or deed, indicated that I feel anything of the kind.

• • • •

We have two children, now nearly grown, and since they were 10 years old our home has been a bedlam of ill-natured argument, criticism and complaint. The significant thing is that the mother is involved in virtually every one of these disturbances and the rest of us get along splendidly together when we are alone. Since I am placing most of the blame for the situation on her, it is only fair to myself to say that she is the only person on earth with whom I have ever had the slightest difficulty. It is not reasonable to think that I would be a Mr. Hyde to one person and a Dr. Jekyll to everyone else.

There long ago ceased to be any pretense of affection on the part of either of us, and she has told me vitriolically to seek any other feminine companionship that I wished. Of course she denies this publicly, but the fact remains that she has no personal interest in me whatsoever. For a number of years my work, which is of a difficult technical nature, has been made much less arduous by the interest, cordiality and loyalty of my secretary, a girl 15 years younger than I. For a long time our relationship was cordial and close, but entirely platonic. Suddenly, a year and a half ago, as was perhaps naturally to be expected, we discovered the interest was no longer impersonal.

My question is now: What to do? The children are in high school and college, and would be seriously embarrassed by the nasty publicity that would follow a divorce. One of the children would, in fact, undoubtedly leave college rather than face this unpleasant situation. Parenthetically, I think that the newspaper attitude toward this highly personal matter is savage, sensational and sadistic, and there should be some means of repressing the unbridled and ghoulish defamation of character that seems to be their idea of reporting such news. However, aside from that, there are financial difficulties in the way of divorce. I am on a professional salary, which of course is never large. I would have difficulty supporting two families. While my wife used to support herself, she undoubtedly would insist now that I support her for the rest of her days, and the courts usually acquiesce in this, no matter who was responsible for the divorce. I would sincerely appreciate your disinterested advice. Yours very truly,

P. H. D.

The Facts of Life.

DEAR P. H. D.: Young persons of high school and college age are old enough to face certain facts of life outside the realm of the purely biological. When endowed with reasonable minds and a healthy spirit of good sportsmanship and budding self-sufficiency, they ought to be willing to make some sacrifice of physical comfort and personal preference on behalf of their parents' welfare. I do not believe it is their right to demand or to suppose that one parent shall make an abject slave or cowed martyr of himself to the other parent in order to serve their interests only and wholly. I should say that the son or daughter who did expect or demand such a sacrifice, who threatened to go to pieces if served with less, is a person who isn't worth the price he places on himself; a person who is essentially parasitical and who couldn't be transformed into adequately self-sustaining adult material by any amount of parental sacrifice.

• • • •

Patient abnegation is a virtue only up to a certain point, beyond which it ceases to pay dividends either to him who practices it or those whose lives it is intended to enrich. And I should say that you would be blundering blindly and wastefully beyond that saving limit in continuing indefinitely to lay waste your powers—during middle years that should be the most vitally alive, productive and sanely ordered in a normal man's life—by going through the motions of serving an empty altar. Such behavior is a mockery and a pretense, an example of hypocrisy and cowardice to those most intimately concerned. Psychologists tell us that it is not so much what we preach, or what we do, as what we, in essence, are, that has the greatest influence on our children's character.

• • • •

Psychologists tell us, too, that the average child would elect almost any physical hardship in preference to hearing his parents wrangle; that even unspoken animosity between parents is sensed by children, and vibrates through the meshes of their nervous systems with most injurious effect. Measuring your sacrifice by this yardstick, I cannot believe you are making any worthwhile contribution to your children's happiness, in keeping the props under a home that for years has been "a bedlam of ill-natured argument, criticism and complaint." For I take it that your sacrifice has been dictated more by fearful considerations and abject subservience to Madame Grundy-ish standards of conventionality, than it has been by stubbornly courageous heroism. I think the latter quality, had you possessed it and exercised it, would have impelled you to take control of the situation long ago and either bring your wife into tolerable line or remove yourself out of reach of her tyrannical persecution.

• • • •

I think it possible that your children pity you and, in the obscurest recesses of their hearts, despise you for letting their mother trample you underfoot, year after year. If you would give them some feeling of security of life, some attitude of adequacy toward life, give them an example of straight-thinking fearlessness in dealing with difficult situations. Show them that it is never too late to rectify mistakes; that life rewards those who have the courage and resourcefulness to chart new programs for themselves when old ones fail through no fault of their own. Your present attitude is the reverse of optimistic and enterprising. It is defeated, querulous, self-pitying—surely a wretched example to give to a son or daughter of high school or college age.

• • • •

Since your home life is a whited sepulcher whose atmosphere is poisoned by an undercurrent of downright hatred between yourself and your wife—for that is what your attitude toward each other, as stated above, amounts to—it seems to me the only honorable, remediable thing to do is to demand—and secure—a total severance of the relationship, a severance that will leave each of you free to seek a more compatible life partner for the rest of the journey. So much for the ethical aspects of the situation.

• • • •

Your dread of the "nasty publicity that would follow a divorce," is old-womanish, for one thing, and rather without foundation, for another thing. Unless you are a very big-wig, indeed, in your particular professional field, you are assuming too much in supposing either press or public will be much aroused by your intention to be free of your long-time wife. Divorce is such a commonplace nowadays that of itself it has ceased to be news; and even when it is (in cases of so-called big names), the news of today, it is forgotten tomorrow. So there is no point in trying to entrench yourself in your misery with that argument.

• • • •

With regard to the financial aspects of the case, I think that there again you are tilting with largely imaginary obstacles. Where there's a will, there's always a way, and the cost of anything worth while eventually adapts itself to the purse of the determined possessor. Ex-wives have a way of marrying again, and often while away the interim between marriages by taking a job as a defensive gesture against sheer boredom. Moreover, if you were to obtain a divorce and remarry, your second wife (supposing you marry the girl you now love, and assuming she loves you as much as you believe) would no doubt cheerfully continue as a wage earner, if such an arrangement is indispensible to marriage.

• • • •

My specific advice is this: Talk the situation over with a lawyer. Get an idea of the approximate cost of a divorce, in terms of court and attorney fees and alimony settlement. Find out what grounds, of an unsensational character, exist for obtaining a divorce. Keep this a matter strictly between your wife and yourself, in the sense of keeping your secretary's name out of it. The situation between yourself and your wife has little, if anything, to do with your feeling for, or intentions toward, her. Your devotion to her is the almost inevitable outgrowth of the emotional frustration between your wife and yourself. Therefore, it is an effect, not a cause; and your wife should not be given the slightest encouragement in attempting to swing the blame on her shoulders.

• • • •

When you have the factual set-up at your fingertips, talk with your wife, telling her what your intentions are and what she may expect. When the time seems ripe, talk with your children, giving them a complete but restrained account of what you are about to do and why it is necessary; ask their understanding and trust; tell them you are not acting hastily, but deliberately, after the most patient and exhaustive counsel with yourself, and for the good of all concerned. Make them feel that you are not in any sense betraying or deserting them, but merely reestablishing your too-long waived claims to a personal life of your own, lived along a mature man's lines. Don't blame their mother; don't blame yourself. Call it a mistake, that time has aggravated beyond the point of endurance, and say that you are setting about doing all that, or whatever, can be done to correct it. If they side against you, that will be regrettable and unfortunate, but if you are secure in the knowledge that what you are doing is the brave and the right thing, and if they have the groundwork of real character in them, you may depend upon it that the day will come when they will reverse their harsh adolescent judgment on you.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Nail Protection.

When you get the gardening urge and seize a trowel to attack those weeds with a gleam of triump in your eye, take time out to dig the fingernails of both your hands deeply into a cake of soap before you begin. The soap prevents dirt from clogging your nails, and makes a lather later when you wash your hands.

Ageless Campus Styles for Modern Youth

Bright Shades Will Prevail On College Campus This Year

For Evening the Tones Will Become More Subdued; Hair Will Be Worn as High as Possible, With Poufs.

By Katherine Vincent.

THE GIRLS who plan their college clothes with an eye to startling the professors are off on the wrong track. The wise young woman sticks to the classics and brings her favorite teacher a bright red apple after class. She masters the fine old art of juggling, and creates effects with color, and not with complicated designs.

Particularly this season, the campus scenes will blaze with bright colors in daytime clothes—autumn rusts, golden browns, the warm wine shades rich gold and blue. Contrasting colors are suggested for sweaters and skirts, with still another shade introduced in scarfs or head kerchiefs.

For evening, color pales or deepens—pinky lavender, dull blues, the jewel tones, and, of course, the old stand-bys—black and white.

Sweaters Needed.

Sturdy skirts of tweed or wool plaid, and a goodly number of sweaters and blouses are the backbone of a college wardrobe, and it makes sense to invest in good sweaters that will stand numerous tubbings and still emerge in good shape. A polo coat or a tweedy top coat is essential, and if you can, take a short chunky jigger coat as an extra.

For traveling, a trim two-piece tweed suit with a fitted jacket is a good idea, and the skirt can work overtime with extra sweaters and blouses.

The tea dancing dress is important, and velveteen is in the lead, in black or in bright colors with rhinestone or silver buttons. Some of these have the typical dirndl skirts, and others are cut on molded lines. For less dressy occasions there are scores of one-piece wool and crepe dresses with draped bodices and pleated skirts.

Hair to Be Worn High.

Others, with tucked detail on the shoulders and sleeves, have nipped-in waistlines and pencil-slim skirts. Rabbits' hair wool and wool crepes promise to be popular, and velveteen combined with wool appears in contrasting colors.

The evening picture for the college girl keeps in tune with the elegance of the season. Hair will be worn as high as possible, with ridiculous little leather poufs, or flora and fauna nestling on top.

Evening gowns will be in the romantic mood, with bared shoulders and sweeping skirts, or in regal fitted sheaths. Long evening capes with broadened shoulders and full swinging lines are in, too—some with hoods to protect you from autumn winds.

YOUR FIGURE MADAME!

Film Star's Disposition May Depend on Whether She Needs Publicity.

By Ida Jean Kain.

AN INTERVIEW with a movie star can be good, bad or indifferent, according to the star's disposition—or whether she needs the publicity. Nevertheless, the writer always feels constrained to present the interviewee in as good a light as possible, even though she has to fight down a sense of guilt at concealing what goes on behind the scenes from the reader.

So many good things, however, are always being said of the motion picture stars that it is easy to get an exaggerated impression of their beauty and charm. We almost take it for granted that they are always glamorous, have sweet dispositions that make them exude charm at all times, and are beautiful under all circumstances. Not all of this is true. Most of them are charming and most of them are beautiful, but they have their off days, just like the rest of us. I thought you would be glad to know that.

Eleanor Whitney's Cute.

Now, how would you like it if you were waiting for an interview with a beauteous blonde with a widely publicized sweet disposition, and overheard her appealing to the Almighty and saying, "Do I have to see that woman now?" Later, of course, she murmured the conventional "So delighted to see you." But I didn't really feel better about it until I had her demonstrating her exercises. It was a hot day, too.

The going isn't always like that. When the photographer came over for a still of an interview with Eleanor Whitney . . . Well, anyone would hesitate to have a picture taken with little Miss Whitney. She's that cute! But this little star was right there with "Wouldn't you like some movie make-up?" So I nominate her for the All-American girl of the movies.

And if I were to name the star who is the least affected, it would be a real beauty who must remain anonymous. I said, "What lovely hair you have. Do you brush it a lot?" And she said, "Ha, ha! It's a wig!" And when I asked the color of her own hair she said just as promptly, "Mouse color." It's easy to see the good points of a star when she herself doesn't think she is so terrific.

Glitter Goes to Heads.

As you might expect, all the glitter goes to the heads of some of the glamour girls. There was that star who, advised that she would be late for a train connection if she tried to keep a luncheon date, dismissed it lightly with "In that case I'll have to have a police escort. But I do love the sound of the sirens, don't you!" Ah, well!

After that it was refreshing to talk with Bette Davis, who is completely without affectation and who greets you like a friend from home. "Don't ask me any beauty secrets—because I'm no beauty," she said, which was just the start I wanted, because she is a beauty and a self-made one. She took what she had and made the best of it.

One interviews and learns. With the older, established stars, a little praise is in order, because they really have worked for their lovely figures. And, like the rest of us, they appreciate credit when it is due and are glad to tell their beauty secrets. Not so much credit is due the younger stars. It is easy for them to have good figures, but when they are older and have good figures, it is because they have exercised right along.

Somehow, beauty does not seem so far out of reach for the average woman when she realizes that even the screen beauties have flaws to overcome.

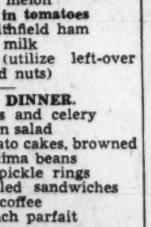
A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 19.

THE FLASHY Italian skiff, the Conte di Savoia, bustled into port here the other day with fresh news of that forgotten pair of the world's unhappiest lovers, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. You remember Dave and Wally. Yes, you do. Toss your mind back a year. Naturally we all galloped down to the dock with sharp pencils and a few old envelopes on which to make notes.



ALICE HUGHES

First we were handed a report that the ducal duo would visit our shores next fall, but we tittered this off, since we couldn't trace the rumor to its source. After all, there is such a thing as yelling "Yoo-hoo, toots!" too often, and since the Bedeaux mess of '37 we are resigned to the fact that the middle-aged lovers will keep on wandering in exile for several years to come. But we did dig up some tangible and authentic anecdotes when we came up against glam-canary Gladys Swarthout, of screen and opera, and her grinning husband, Frank Chapman, a retired baritone. The Chapmans were shipmates of Davy and his wife on the run from Genoa to Cannes, which consumed only four hours and a cocktail party.

Chapman, who met the prince when he was here in '24, says he looks fine now, without the mice below the eyes which were so noticeable when he was a playboy. Moreover, he has added some needed pounds. Gladys grew more lyrical. "They are lovely, charming people," said the lark, "and the best listeners I ever met. They are very gracious to each other, and I should say they are very happily married. The duchess is a really beautiful woman, but is terribly camera-shy." Well, Glad, we'd have kept our illusions longer if it hadn't been for those ghastly newsreel pictures shot on their wedding day. They were the meanest and most tragic trick of honesty a film camera ever played. Heigho, it's nice to know all is well with the exiled, wandering pair. One can't help pitying them, somehow.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of the leading local snoops says in print that, whatever the status of the Howard Hughes-Katharine Hepburn "romance," the rich flier's heart is really thumping for a beautiful model who lives on East Forty-eighth street.

Never did a person fade so quickly from the New York consciousness as did this solemn, serious, inarticulate Hughes under the impact of the Corrigan boy. This town always goes crazy for romantic and adventurous Irish, and it promptly forgot Howard's scientific certainty for the divil-may-care kid. The papers went completely slap-happy. One printed "Welcome to Wrong Way Corrigan" across its page 1—backward. Another printed a greeting in Gaelic in green ink. The boy had a few great days. I saw his back going up Eighth avenue in an open car, surrounded by motor-bike cops—but since they were hitting 70 through the heart of town, he was just a blur.

Passing the stage door of the Music Box Theater on Forty-fifth street the other noon, I saw a pretty girl in shorts and polo shirt reading a racing form. A simple sight—but full of meaning for those who know Broadway in August. It meant that a musical show rehearsal was on! Can't be long now. I hear that Walter Huston may come back to us in the leading role of Peter Stuyvesant in "Knickerbocker Holiday," and that Ann Harding may pop out of retirement in a revival of Shaw's fine "Candida." Since her marriage to Maestro Werner Janssen, Ann has been entirely out of focus.

I hear the French are thinking of building a sister ship for the 83,000-ton Normandie, thus keeping step with the British, whose Queen Elizabeth, sister to the Queen Mary, is now under construction. All very nice, these super-liners, but who will travel on them when Europe crashes to bits? Soldiers, no doubt and alas!

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Vacation Trousseau.

The Departure.

What shall you wear? . . . Oh, well, it doesn't matter—this last day. And just for the people at the office. Besides, you want everything to look nice and fresh when you get home. Everybody will be so critical.

Still—you've got to wear something. Well, certainly not your print—it's just been cleaned . . . nor your lace. You might wear your linen suit—no, it would get wrinkled and you don't want to ruin your fresh blouse. There's your jersey suit—no, you want to look fresh on the train. Besides, everything's packed. Well, it looks as if you'll just have to go to the office in shorts—no, they're packed, too!

Wait—you might put on that funny old seersucker you had two summers ago! You dig it out of a corner of the closet. It smells musty. Oh, well, it doesn't matter—this last day . . . and just for the people at the office.

You can't find the belt—oh, well, you'll take a piece of ribbon. You'll have to have some kind of a jacket—it's sleeveless. Well, you'll take that old lace jacket off of your old evening dress. Now your old sandals—they're pretty bad, but all your other shoes are cleaned and packed.

You survey yourself in the mirror. Now what if you really should meet some one—oh, well, you're not likely, to, just this one day. You can sort of look ahead . . . and scoot around a corner if you see anyone you know. Anyway, there's nothing to be done. You are simply NOT going to put on any of your nice fresh vacation clothes . . . just for this last day at the office.

The Return.

You get up a half-hour earlier. You want to have plenty of time to dress . . . this first day of going back to the office. You get out your new black crepe, your suede slippers your best chiffon stockings, your most expensive slip.

You make up your face carefully, tinker with your hair, fuss with your eyelashes. Yes, you do look just a little different . . . as if you had been somewhere . . . as if something had happened to you.

You put on your new finery, preen yourself before the mirror. Shall you wear your earrings? Why not? . . . This first day back at the office. And your best bracelet and your suede gloves and your new hat. Really you do look—well not quite like yourself.

You can see yourself entering the office. You wonder if they will all be sitting there in their old summer things—a little drab and wistful. You will walk in gracefully, poised and relaxed—not rushed and grim-faced as you always have been. What a commotion! You can hear the men whistling in surprise . . . the girls "oh-ing" and "ah-ing." Then a chorus—"Oh you look perfectly grand!" "So rested!" "What a darling dress!" "Why you don't look like the same person!"

They will turn you around, inspect you, admire you. And then after the tumult has subsided you will sit down at your desk feeling a little shy like a stranger on a new job but still very happy and important. You are so glad you wore your best clothes. That's one thing about the office—you really have to dress up there. It's not like it is at home where you can just wear anything.

Foreign Corps Like to Eat Corn On Cob by Hand

Envoys Enjoy American Custom at Some Formal Dinner Parties.

By Margaret Wallace

SUMMER has its special table etiquette problems. One woman wants to know if she should serve corn on the cob to her guests if she lacks the silver prongs with handles attached to stick in the ears.

Well, of course, these new gadgets are nice, but our best people have been eating corn on the cob for many years without them. Corn on the cob does not seem to fit in well at a formal dinner, but certainly there is no reason not to serve it when guests are invited to the family meal.

Some hostesses do serve it at formal dinners, and those who seem to enjoy it most are the members of the foreign diplomatic corps, who like this American custom and take the buttered ear of corn in their hands and bury their teeth in its luscious goodness.

There is some traditional rule or other about using only one hand, but it really seems more artistic to have a firm grasp on the ear of corn so it will not slip than to keep one hand politely in the lap.

Takes Issue With Theory.

Another summer bugbear is the long-handled beverage spoon so necessary to those who like to have their iced tea and coffee sweetened. Some authorities say this spoon, unlike other spoons, can be left in the glass when drinking the beverage. We take issue with that theory. There is no reason why the spoon cannot be taken out and placed on the side of the plate on which the glass is placed. If the glass is on a coaster and there is no room for the spoon, it can be placed on the bread and butter plate or on the dinner plate.

Another controversy which gains impetus in the summer is over the proper method of eating asparagus. One school of etiquette insists it must be eaten with a fork, while another school declares just as emphatically that when it is firm at the ends and has very little butter or sauce, it can be taken up in the fingers.

May Use Fingers.

This is the season of club sandwiches, too, for many housewives have them prepared and wrapped in waxed paper and left in the icebox on the maids' day out. If the sandwich is small and compactly put together, it may be taken up in the fingers, but sometimes this has disastrous results. It is a little more polite to cut it through with a knife and fork. If the sandwich is for a picnic meal, it can be cut into smaller pieces before it is served. But like corn on the cob, a club sandwich is a delectable but not elegant food.

You may pick up spring onions, raw celery, pickles and radishes in your fingers without having the etiquette cult raising its eyebrows. But you commit a grave social error when you dip your radish or your celery in a salt dish. The salt should be placed on the side of your bread and butter plate or on the rim of your dinner plate.

Maggy Rouff Uses Fur To Trim Fall Models

Paris, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—A prognostication advanced by Maggy Rouff concerns the application of fur trimmings in panels, diagonals or spirals. Two diagonal bands of golden seal traverse the skirt of a "tabac" brown coat in the Rouff advance winter collection; narrow brown astrakhan bands criss-cross themselves to form sqquares on a mahogany colored tweed; beaver panels the back of a rich sea-green wool coat.

Dizziness and Noises in Head Often Due to Poison Absorption

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Quite often I am asked to discuss Meniere's disease. This condition is often defined as dizziness or vertigo, associated with head noises and partial deafness. The differentiation of Meniere's disease, strictly speaking, is somewhat different from this. Real Meniere's disease is quite rare.

The combination of dizziness with head noises and deafness, on the other hand, is common. It may come from absorption of poisonous products from the intestine, or from an infected tooth or tonsils. Those who worry about this combination of symptoms should remember that this is the usual form and can be relieved.

It may be that this set of symptoms is due to a chronic inflammation of the middle ear. Here the head noises prevail because the slow hardening of the tendons of the little bones of the middle ear causes tension and scraping between them which sound like explosions to the poor eardrum of the patient who owns them.

The reason that dizziness and deafness go together lies in the close anatomic association of the two branches of the eighth cranial nerve. One branch is that of the nerve of hearing—the auditory branch, and the other is the nerve of equilibrium—the vestibular branch.

Why these two functions should be united together is a mystery. Hearing and equilibrium do not have anything to do with each other. But united they are—one goes to the end organ of equilibrium—the cochlea and the vestibule respectively—two little bony nests of beautiful intricacy imbedded in the temporal bone just behind the external ear.

However mysterious their association, we have learned to use them together, and we would be very confused if they suddenly got separated.

Inside both of these bony organs there is a lining of extremely sensitive nervous cells, and over them flows a clear lymphatic fluid.

It is much like the eye, and real Meniere's disease is much like the eye disease of glaucoma, described yesterday.

Real Meniere's disease consists in a series of attacks of dizziness, nausea, vertigo, and noises in the ear, grafted upon a partial deafness on one side.

The cause is probably some defect in the circulation of the clear lymphatic fluid in the two end organs of equilibrium and hearing.

The condition can be cured in most cases by an ear surgeon—either by changing the tension of the fluid or, in confirmed cases, by cutting the auditory nerve.

Poet Frost's Daughter To Direct School Here

Miss Lesley Frost to Be Associate Director at King-Smith.

Washingtonians will be honored this season by the presence of Miss Lesley Frost, who, besides being the daughter of a famous man, is rapidly becoming noted for a number of things in her own right. Daughter of Robert Frost, the New England poet, she will arrive next month to take up her new duties as associate director of the King-Smith School.

An impressive string of degrees follows Miss Frost's name in the school catalogue. She has studied at Wellesley, Barnard, University of Michigan and University of New Mexico. Although young in years, she already has a number of books to her credit. Unlike her famous father, she has turned to prose, and has published several volumes of stories. Her latest work, "Come Christmas," is an anthology of Christmas poems.

Sailing, Bookshops Among Her Hobbies

No bluestocking, Miss Frost is a woman of many interests, among which is sailing. Several years ago she sailed from Gloucester, Mass., in an 85-foot sloop, without a motor, to Sweden. The venture was made in company with five men and another woman.

At one time, Miss Frost was mistress of a bookshop in Pittsfield, Mass., which was a center of attraction for the hundreds of summer colonists in the Berkshires as well as natives. She sent a book trailer-caravan through New England, loaded with all kinds of material.

Between getting degrees and running bookshops, Miss Frost found time to teach creative writing at Rockford College, in Rockford, Ill. At the King-Smith School she will head the department of literature and creative writing and also will held direct the policies of the school.

Poet Frost To Visit Daughter

Mr. Frost seldom leaves Amherst, Mass., a charming town where he has made his home for a number of years and where he has served as a member of the faculty at Amherst College. But he has decided to spend part of next winter in Washington and has promised to give readings of his poems at the King-Smith School and elsewhere in the Capital.

Poet's widows and poet's daughters seem to have become quite a feature of the King-Smith organization. Mrs. Vachel Lindsay, whose late husband gained fame with his "Congo" and other poems, came here several years ago to teach. She has only recently left to become head mistress of Oxford, a preparatory school for girls in Hartford, Conn.

Also in Washington is Mrs. Higginson Rogers, another who made a success of book caravans. Several winters ago Mrs. Rogers, in company with a friend, traveled through the mountains of the South with literature for the natives.

Miss Marion Tenn Sets Wedding Date

Miss Marion Tenn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Tenn, has selected Monday, September 4, as the date of her wedding to Dr. Harry Dalinsky, of Baltimore. The ceremony will take place at 3 o'clock at Stansbury Hall, Rabbi Harry Silverstone officiating, and will be followed by a dinner and reception.

Mrs. Bruce Griffin will serve as matron of honor for her sister, and Miss Lee Tenn, another sister, will be maid of honor. The Misses Mae Tenn, another sister, Elaine Levin and Beverly oodman, will be flower girls. Charles Dalinsky will be best man for his brother and Aaron Dodek will be ring bearer.

The couple will live in Washington.

Miss McMinimy Married Aug. 6

Mrs. G. Orr McMinimy announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Mary Winifred McMinimy, and Raymond Wells Murphy on August 6, at 2:30 o'clock at the Sherwood Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Thomas Law Coyle officiated in the presence of the immediate family and a few friends.

Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Murphy left on a motor trip through Canada. They will be at home in Washington after August 22.

Holiday House Carries On Active Program; Girls' Friendly Society Sponsors Va. Project

43 Children and Adults Are Being Accommodated for Vacations.

Holiday House, maintained in Virginia by the Girls' Friendly Society of the District of Columbia, has been carrying on an active program this season. It has been under the direction of Miss Bruce Robbins, with Mrs. Wilbur Nelson as assistant director.

Although the capacity of the house is nominally 34, the figures have been reversed this year and 43 children and grownups are being accommodated for their summer vacations.

An outdoor program is being stressed for the children, who range in age from 6 years to 16. The day's schedule combines the things which they decide in the morning they want to do and those which the leaders outline for them. Their craft work has been one of the most important phases of their educational activity. From No. 10 vegetable and fruit cans, they have made Indian tom toms by the simple process of stretching portions of old inner tubes over the ends and lacing them down with throngs of the same salvaged material. These were painted in colorful designs and were a feature of an Indian evening they staged when the tom toms were completed.

Children Conduct English Country Fair

During the past week they have had an English country fair. The girls made themselves peasant aprons of unbleached muslin on which they drew border designs in colored crayon. With these they wore bright kerchiefs, completing effective costumes in which to preside at their booths during the fair. The patrons were older guests at Holiday House, visitors and the young vendors themselves who inspected other booths while their own was not busy. The wares were simple things made from pine cones and other materials in connection with their nature and craft work.

Two-thirds of the residents at Holiday House this summer are children. Miss Ruth Lang, of Hartford, Conn., is serving as children's counselor. Miss Barbara Bryant, of Washington, is assistant counselor, with Miss Mary Lois Lutton and Miss Carol Beebe as apprentice counselors.

The house will continue open for week-end parties until the end of November, but will close its summer program for children September 19.

the Washington Episcopal Diocese is headed by Miss Elsa Needham, as president, with Miss Marjorie Zug, secretary; Miss Annabelle Tillett, treasurer, and Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, an associate member. The society is divided into three groups: The "candidates," comprising children, with Mrs. Grace O. Pariseau as chairman; the "younger members," comprising young people up to 18 years, with Mrs. Richard S. Green, jr., as chairman, and the "older members," over 18 years, under the chairmanship of Miss Mary Sensel.

The candidates have been quiet during the summer, but the younger members have had picnic breakfasts in Rock Creek Park, straw rides, campfire programs and, night before last, their annual boat ride. They also sent to a conference in Charlottesville, Va., in June, three delegates, Joan Rowland, Ruth Newcomer and Olive Vurney.

The older members have visited several of the summer camps, one of which is maintained by the diocese of each State. Those to which which they have been include Summer Rest, the Virginia camp, and that at Cape May, N. J. Today a group will go to Sag Harbor, the New York camp. Those in the party will be Miss Irene Harding, Miss Janet James, Miss Katherine Moncure, Miss Dorothy Goode and Miss Jean Goode.

A conference of the older members is planned at Epiphany Church in October.

Bedtime Stories

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Young Spike.

Age hath wisdom, but in truth
Confidence belongs to youth.
—Old Mother Nature.

Mrs. Lightfoot had raised some fine children but none smarter than young Spike. He was a little over a year old now and growing his first antlers. A proud young buck he was. No boy with his first suggestion of a future mustache ever took more pride in it than did Spike in those two rather knobby growths on his head. They were hardly worthy of the name of antlers for when fully grown and hardened and the velvet rubbed off they would be merely two spikes. Now, not having attained full growth, they were not even spikes for the ends were mere knobs instead of sharp points as they would be later. But this took nothing from the young buck's pride in them. When he drank he would see them reflected in the water and would feel, I suspect, that already he was grown and quite the equal of his elders.

He was out in the Great World now quite on his own for Mother Deer had two babies to look after and they required all of her attention. Spike didn't mind this. Indeed, he preferred it this way. He could do as he pleased now, and he felt quite equal to any situation that might arise. His self-confidence was supreme. It is likely to be that way with youth, especially youth with health and strength and well trained in self-reliance.

Spike was well trained. He was truly smart, for he had appreciated that all that his mother had tried to teach him had been for his own good and so he had learned and remembered. Now he was putting these things into practice and at the same time continuing to learn with experience as his teacher. During his first summer he had seen little of his father, but in the fall Lightfoot had joined the family and from that time on Spike had tried to imitate him and do as he did. The wonderful antlers that crowned Lightfoot's head were a source of never-ceasing admiration to Spike and it was a shock to him when, in the winter, in the yard trodden out in the snow by the family, he came across one of those great antlers lying in the snow and later saw his father no longer crowned, shorn of his weapons and his pride. Yes, indeed, it was a shock and something of his admiration for his father was lost.

Recently, however, he had recovered this for he had discovered the place to which Lightfoot had retired to be as much alone as possible, and, behold, a new crown was in the making! It promised to be a finer crown than the one that Spike remembered. So, taking care not to be obtrusive or annoying, Spike hung around where he could occasionally get a glimpse of his father and by imitation learn to do as he did.

Now and then Spike ran across his twin sister. She also was on her own and promised to be a handsome young doe. Sometimes they would stay together for a while, but not for long. He was just a wee bit scornful of her for her head was smooth. There were no spikes growing there and never would be. Spike felt vastly superior.

"Remember," his mother warned him as he was starting out in the Great World, "that you have four aids to safety. They are your sight, your hearing, your sense of smell and your ability to run. All are important and none is to be neglected."

"Which is most important—to see, hear, smell or run," Spike wanted to know.

"You can see danger, hear danger, smell danger, but not one or all will be of any use to you if you cannot get away from it," replied his mother. "So trust to your legs. Put your faith in speed. Sometimes you may run needlessly, but that doesn't matter. What does matter is not running when you should run. Your eyes may fail you, your ears may fail you and your nose may fail you, especially when the wind is the wrong way, but your legs will not fail you if you use them at the first suspicion of danger. Only the foolish among the Deer folk are ashamed to run and they seldom live long. Remember that."

Spike said he would, and he did. Could you have watched him you probably would have thought him nervous and timid. He wasn't. He was simply being smart.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Smithsonian Chief . . . broken boomerang

Some of the Capital's Government workers are simmering, and if they belonged to the C. I. O. there might be a sit-down strike in one of Mr. Roosevelt's bureaus. The aggravation is that the Government appears to be robbing thousands of its employes of 8 cents a year.

• • • •

This insufferable wrong is being inflicted on workers whose annual salary, when divided by 24, results in 1-3 of a cent which is sliced off at the twice-a-month paydays. What's 1-3c, you ask—but multiplied by 24 it makes 8 cents at the end of the year.

The only comeback the boys and girls have is to quit work at 4:20 each day, instead of 4:30, which more than evens the score.

• • • •

NEXT TABLE ECHOES: At the Hay-Adams (where John Lewis likes to eat): "They ought to give Switzerland a mandate over Germany" . . . The blonde at the Terrace: "He never gets really diplomatic until after midnight, I mean snaky." . . . At the Powhatan Roof: "The Senator always gets an all-summer committee in Washington because it's hotter in Texas, and not nearly so air-cooled."

"—Mr. Sec'y throws a boomerang"

One of Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet, a gentleman of irrepressible curiosity, was out in Rock Creek Park the other day with a friend, throwing boomerangs, just to see if they could make 'em come back. They were home-made, domestic boomerangs, but they came back, all right.

• • • •

Behind a tree another gentleman watched them until, finally reassured, he approached them diffidently.

"I see you're throwing boomerangs," he said. "I wonder if you'd like to throw this rare old boomerang which I have here."

• • • •

With some alacrity Mr. Secretary took the rare old boomerang and gave it a mighty heave. It struck a stone wall and broke into many, many pieces.

"Oh, gee whiz, shucks, gosh darn," said the anthropologist with the rare old boomerang, "It's one of the most valuable boomerangs at the Smithsonian, and I just took it out for a trial!"

• • • •

So they glued it together, and if Grand Mogul Abbot of the Smithsonian finds out, let him blame the President's Cabinet adviser.

I'd tell you his name, except that I don't think a Cabinet member's presidential prospects should suffer just because he throws a boomerang now and then.

"John resented a boo"

In these times of strong words and little action, I'm happy to report that John Hamilton, the jut-jawed leader of the GOP, almost socked a heckler in the nose at an air-cooled rendezvous the other evening . . . The orchestra leader, it seems, had dedicated a dance tune to Mr. Hamilton, when some ill-mannered buffoon uttered a loud boo.

• • • •

One version has it that John did sock him in the nose . . . At any rate, they adjourned to a semi-deserted foyer and glowered at each other, where a couple of statesmen on the loose managed to patch up a truce between them.

A man doesn't wear a jaw like John's for nothing.

At the close of Bob LaFollette's quiz of the embattled industrial armies from Youngstown, it developed under patient questioning that one company cop was armed with a pistol, blackjack, hand grenade, tear gas bomb and brass knuckles.

"Anything else?" asked the Senator.

"No," said the special cop. "That was all."

From the front row came a stage whisper:

"He was practically nude, wasn't he?"

4,000 March In Maryland Legion Fete

Nice, Jackson Review Parade; Tydings in Procession.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 19.—World War veterans, attired in flashy tunics and shiny shrapnel helmets, paraded with their wives tonight behind several dozen bands from American Legion posts throughout Maryland.

Climaxing the four-day Maryland Department convention of the legionnaires, the parade attracted an estimated 4,000 marchers, including Regular Army troops, National Guardsmen, Coast Guardsmen, Boy Scouts, Legion auxiliaries dressed in varicolored uniforms, and a detachment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The parade formed in front of the George Washington Monument and marched through the business section to the reviewing stand, where stood Gov. Nice, Mayor Howard W. Jackson and State officials.

Senator Millard E. Tydings, who was lauded by Department Commander Bruce T. Bair in his annual report this afternoon, was also in the parade.

Dressed in black and orange uniforms with huge shakos, the Baltimore Drum Corps strutted at the head of the parade following their selection as the best corps in the State.

The Francis Scott Key Post Corps of Frederick, dressed in their Northwest Mounted uniform, was selected as second best in the competition held just before the beginning of the parade.

Last year's prize winner, the Dorchester Post, of Cambridge, placed third, but they zipped through the quick-step tunes without sign of defeat.

What can be done with a bugle in the way of swing music was demonstrated by the noncompeting Federal Post, of Baltimore. The colored musicians "drew the house down" with the improvisions on the martial airs, which sent some jitterbugs prancing alongside.

Fished From Canal, $7,000 Fire Truck Returns to Elkton

Elkton, Md., Aug. 19 (AP).—The new $7,000 fire truck was back in service tonight after having been fished from the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal.

A Government dredge raised the truck after an immersion of several hours in 20 feet of water in Chesapeake City and the pride of the Elkton Volunteer Fire Department was brought back here.

The apparatus was summoned to fight a blaze which threatened ten garages in the midcity section of Chesapeake City. Chauffeur Robert Jenkins stopped the machine near the edge of a 10-foot bank of the canal. The brakes slipped.

Va. Legion Urges Pensions For Venereal Disease Victims

Richmond, Va., Aug. 19.—Virginia legionnaires, at their Charlottesville State Convention, put their strength behind a move to allow pensions or compensation to World War veterans totally and permanently disabled by venereal disease contracted while in the service.

At present, these veterans, no matter what their state of disability, are barred from these benefits by the "misconduct" clause in the veterans' laws.

The resolution, adopted in a flurry of other resolutions and reports at the convention's final session, pointed out that this clause is not in effect against Spanish American War Veterans who receive pensions "regardless of the cause of their disabilities."

It recommended that the national convention of the Legion at Los Angeles in September work for legislation to give the World War veterans "same status" with the Spanish American veterans in this resepect. The resolution was offered by Robey Thompson, of Abingdon, past department commander.

The department's adjutant, W. Glenn Elliott, who has made a study of the question, explained today that it was his belief that venereal disease were "a war hazard."

The adjutant, who served in the medical corps, said that rigors of service appeared in many instances to have caused a fresh outbreak or recurrence of diseases in men who had believed themselves cured. He cited a case where a number of cases appeared among men on the march after they had been quarantined in camp for three weeks because of an epidemic of measles.

Apple Raisers See Price Rise, Lower Yields

Problems Discussed at Regional Parley in Winchester.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 19.—Apple growers from the Shenandoah and Cumberland fruit belts, assembled here today, heard experts cite factors which they expect will affect the trade during the ensuing season.

The consensus appeared to be that prices for fruit this year will be somewhat improved as a result of decreased yields now in view.

Much of the meeting, called by Appalachian Apples, Inc., regional organization of producers, was devoted to technical discussions of apple packs and other problems.

Dr. O. C. Stine, chief of the Statistical Research Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, and A. R. Okey, statistician, presented data showing U. S. industrial conditions are nearly 30 per cent below the levels of a year ago and predicted that the recession undoubtedly will be reflected in the purchasing power of consumers of apples.

However, the speakers pointed out that recent statistics indicate industrial conditions, at the outset of the 1938 marketing season, are moving upward whereas a year ago, the trend was downward during the marketing season. A steady decline in the export market was another problem discussed.

Ways and means of meeting competition from citrus fruit producers; the tremendous increase in the growth of beverage juice drinking and the adverse effect this development is having on the apple industry were cited.

C. Purcell McCue, of Greenwood, Va., president of Appalachian Apples, Inc., presided. W. E. Scoggan and Dr. A. Bruce Eagle, both of Martinsburg, W. Va., assisted him in directing the program. The meeting was attended by approximately 100 growers and sellers.

Grand Jury Continues Own Inquiry on Suspended Police Head.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 19.—An injunction restraining William P. Lawson, self-suspended police commissioner, from re-entering the securities business was granted today to the Security and Exchange Commission as a grand jury continued its own investigation.

United States District Judge W. Calvin Chestnut, in a ten-page opinion, said Lawson by "transportation and communication in interstate commerce" engaged in transactions "which operated as a fraud and deceit upon the purchasers."

The opinion declared Lawson accepted securities for safekeeping for customers and "without the knowledge of such customers convert(ed) such securities to his own use."

The Baltimore grand jury called 22 customers of the Lawson brokerage firm to appear at the night session.

Relief Costs In Maryland Rise in July

Month's Bill $726,498 With 29,156 Cases on Rolls.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 19.—Maryland's relief bill rose to $726,498 in July, the board of State aid and charities reported today, continuing a climb started in June.

Analysis of the board's monthly report showed increased direct relief costs in Baltimore City were chiefly responsible for the $10,000 increase in welfare costs in the State last month, compared with June.

As of August 1, the report said, there were 29,156 cases drawing assistance under some relief category, with old-age pensions accounting for $298,759 of the total. At the end of July, 17,097 persons—or 15.8 per cent of the State's population over 65—were receiving pensions.

The average pension grant last month was $17.50.

Approximately 19,932 children received $225,426, in average grants of $11.31 each, under the aid to dependent children program, the report stated; $12.575 was expended in aid to needy blind, and $187,898 in direct relief to unemployables.

More than 8,200 cases were listed on the State's direct relief rolls, and 2,229 applications were pending at the end of the month.

The number of cases receiving assistance, average grants, and total relief costs for July, were broken down by the board as follows:

Forward Passer's Greatest Asset? Pair of Trusty Ends, Says Baugh

By "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh.

(Forward Passing Champion, National Football League.)

There is one thing that I have discovered is a great help to a forward passer. That thing is a nice, tall end with a good pair of hands, football sense and the ability to get down the field with plenty of speed.

SAMMY BAUGH.

Of course, a pair of good pass-catching ends is even more of a help, but they rarely come in pairs. Sometimes they do, however, and as passer is in real luck. Right now, I'm talking about myself. Because I had two of a kind out there working for me last season.

I doubt if any passer ever had as great a pair of ends as Charlie Malone and Wayne Milner working with him. With the Redskins, last year, those two fellows made my job comparatively easy. If the pass was half decent, they made it click. But more about them later.

In recent years, the fellows who have been throwing forward passes have been getting a break. When I was a kid in Texas, I remember that the big hero was the fellow who caught a pass for a touchdown or a long gain. But, gradually, the situation has been reversed. For some reason, the tendency has been to give the passer most of the credit, especially in the newspapers and on the radio.

The best-thrown pass in the world is no-account unless the fellow on the other end can snare that ball. Most anybody can throw a pass. The chances are that you could take the ribbon clerk out from behind his counter, give him a football and he'd heave it pretty well. But the chances are that the same fellow would look like an awful bum trying to catch a pass.

Ever since I've been playing football, I've been lucky enough to work with unusually fine ends. In my three years on the Texas Christian varsity we always came up with one good end; sometimes, two. And when I played for the College All-Stars against the Green Bay Packers last year, I was pitching to one of the best ends in the business—Gaynell Tinsley from Louisiana State.

In one respect, that Tinsley was tops among ends. He not only could get down the field, shake a defense man loose, go up in the air for a ball and catch it, but he could go places with that pumpkin afterwards.

Tinsley was two kinds of ball player in one. From the minute a pass play started until the ball was caught, he was a great pass receiver. Then, when he had that ball, he wasn't an end any longer. He was a halfback. In a broken field, he was no end running with that ball; he was an experienced ball carrier with speed, a change of pace and plenty of leg drive. Tinsley, you remember, didn't stop short of a touchdown after he took that pass from me to beat the Packers last year in the All-Star game.

• • • •

The next time I saw Tinsley he was playing for the Chicago Cardinals a few weeks later against the Redskins in Washington. And on one play, I saw him much too late. I was playing safety and he gave me the slip as if I were blindfolded and took a pass over my head for a touchdown.

But getting back to Malone and Milner, there's a nice pair to chuck to. When I was in Texas, I saw plenty of Malone at Texas A. & M., and it was comforting to know that he'd be out there working for me on the Redskins. If you wanted an end built to your own specifications, you couldn't design a better one than Malone. Six feet, three inches, hands like a pair of hams, speed and plenty of fight.

He knows how to use that height of his. I've seen him go up in the air for an over-the-line pass and actually fight his way to the ball in the middle of three or four defense men. Any time Malone starts cutting for a pass, he's liable to throw the defense into a panic. If the pass is half decent, no one man is going to prevent Malone from catching it. He's a natural at drawing the defense in and leaving another of our fellows open.

It was Malone's pass-catching against the New York Giants and the Chicago Bears that helped us plenty in winning those two games and the title last fall. After Malone kept catching passes for short gains, they were downright panicky. In both of those games, because they were sucked in by the threat of Malone taking an over-the-line pass, we shook Ed Justice loose for touchdown passes that actually won the games.

Wayne Milner, who got his football reputation at Notre Dame and in the College All-Star game before joining the Redskins three years ago, must certainly be rated as good an end as Malone, but he is a different type.

Milner doesn't have Malone's height and he isn't built for those over-the-line passes. But he's plenty smart out there. He has that knack of shaking himself loose down field with a change of pace that sucks in the defense and gets himself in the clear. He can cut and cross over and has a swell pair of hands. Anything that's catchable, if that's a word, Milner will get. And if a pass to Milner clicks for us, we haven't got a 10 or 20-yard gain, we've got 30, 40, or 50 yards and, perhaps, a touchdown. He took two of those long ones over the goal line against the Bears in the championship game last fall.

A fellow working with Malone and Milner gets to know them and that counts. He knows their habits and their little tricks, when they are going to cut and when they want the ball. He knows, too, where they want it. Why, there were times last season when we were working our passes by instinct, no fooling.

I've pitched to dozens of ends in my time; some very good ends and some that were not so good. I never did see a good end who didn't have plenty of fight and spirit. I've had fellows who used to give me that old college try and just miss catching a pass. They'd get it on their finger tips and drop it. It always looked like it was too bad, but sometimes it was simply bad. The difference between a good pass catcher and one who isn't is that the good pass catcher isn't one of those "just missed" guys. He catches those passes that other fellows just miss. Guys who are always "just missing" never helped any club.

Of course, it's a great help, too, to have a fellow on your club who can throw that ball where your boys want it.

Boyd Has One on the House

Jack Dempsey Slugs Broom, Saves Protege

Former Champion Fails to Demonstrate Punches on Boyd; Nickey Substitutes for Everett in Main Bout; Buck Meets Kanner.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A trifle thicker through the torso and a little slower on his No. 10 brogans, Jack Dempsey, one-time ruler of fistiana, went through his paces yesterday for the benefit of a small delegation of newspapermen, photographers, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn and Bill Boyd.

Boyd was responsible for the affair, inasmuch as he is Dempsey's latest discovery and Jack was showing him off before the working press and, incidentally, trying to demonstrate how a guy can be jarred loose from his innermost ideas. Dempsey fulfilled his contract to the letter. The announcement said he would work out with Boyd and show him a few punching tricks, and the boys fell for the gag en masse.

He worked with Boyd all right, but we thought he was going to work against him and give the semibald sailor a couple of tsic pokes on the chin to emphasize his remarks. But if the sandwich man had an idea of punching his new find around, it must have been weeks ago in a fit of temper. He used an old, scraggly broom the janitor uses to sweep out the dressing room in demonstrating his points, while Boyd remained at a safe distance to the rear.

"Do It This Way."

"Go at it this way," Dempsey grunted, puffing on a cigarette jammed sidewise in his mouth and charging at the broom. The gentleman taking the broom's part in the argument, Trainer Benny Benjamin, waved his weapon defiantly in the former champion's face, and Dempsey cracked it down with unhealthy swipes of his broad paws. Time and again he repeated the maneuver before Boyd tried his hand, and seemed to enjoy getting into action, even if only against a stick of straw.

Once in the ring, arrayed in gaudy purple trunks and black and white shoes, Jack confined his activities to holding in his bulging tummy, while posing with Boyd. The photographers made the lad slam a left hook to Dempsey's head while cameras clicked, flashlights bulbs popped and the boys yelled "Hold it! Let's get one more like that."

Then Dempsey was permitted to tap Boyd a few times in the ribs, lightly, of course. Boyd's body sounded solid, although it wasn't a fair test of his ability to withstand punishment. He undoubtedly would make a great movie fighter. It was more of a workout for the press than Dempsey — and we should have known better.

Ahearn Signs (Bill) Nichey.

Ahearn, meanwhile, was busy signing another fighter for Boyd. Buck Everett, originally assigned the job, got himself knocked out in the first round of his fight with Sammy Bettina, and was pulled down a notch. Buck arrived in town yesterday and blamed his own carlessness for his downfall. Bettina, he alleges, hit him with a left hok coming out of a clinch after Buck dropped his arms, and, as Sammy is a southpaw, it was curtains for Everett.

Billy Nichey, of Pittsburgh, has been substituted for Buck. A hasty investigation of the records failed to bring Nichey's name to light,

Griffs Blow 3-to-0 Lead After Fifth

Monte Weaver Is Victim as Boston Takes 4th Straight.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boston, Aug. 19.—In and out of Al Simmons' glove plopped a baseball this afternoon and the Nats lost a ten-inning, 4-3 battle to the Boston Red Sox, thereby maintaining their immaculate record in Fenway Park this season. As yet they have not won a game here.

A line drive off the bat of little Bobby Doerr terminated the contest with two out in the tenth and frustrated a gallant pitching effort by Monte Weaver.

Juggles in Run.

Simmons made a valiant attempt to catch the ball, reaching it after a long run, but he lost possession after juggling the ball on his finger tips, and the winning run crossed the plate.

It was a costly defeat for the Nats. Because out in Detroit the big bat of Hank Greenberg was winning two games for the Tigers against the Browns. Detroit thus gained a game and a half in the battle for fourth place and reduced the Nats' margin over the Tigers to a game and a half.

Weaver found himself in a pitching duel with the left-handed Fritz Ostermueller, who held the Nats to eight hits while the Red Sox were collecting 10 against the Nats' professorial-looking right hander.

At one point in the proceedings, the Nats were in possession of a 3-0 lead but in the fifth inning Jimmy Foxx carved a two-run chunk out of that advantage by swatting his thirty-third homer of the season with a man on base in the fifth inning. In the sixth, the Sox tied the score at 3-3.

Monte Wild.

Weaver's wildness in the tenth contributed to his defeat. He walked Foxx to lead off the inning and put the run in scoring position, and Joe Cronin sacrificed the slugger to second. Higgins was purposely passed and Weaver appeared to be extricating himself from trouble when he forced Chapman to foul to Rick Ferrell. But along came Doerr with his drive into left field and the ball game was over.

Ostermueller yielded a pair of runs to the Nats in the first inning after filling the bases before getting a man out. He walked Case, hit Lewis, and issued a pass to Simmons. Bonura singled to center to drive two of his pals home, but Travis, West nad Bluege were unable to prolong the rally.

Al Simmons inspired the Nats' third run when he doubled down the third base line at the start of the third inning. Bluege's single to left eventually scored him.

Griffs Muff Chance.

But Ostermueller reformed suddenly from that point. In the last seven innings he held the Nats scoreless, allowing only five hits over that period. In the sixth, the Nats muffed a chance to score after Higgins fumbled Ferrell's grounder and Weaver walked with none out. But Case popped up, Lewis hit into a force play and Simmons lined out.

In the ninth, victory appeared to lean toward the Nats when Bonura singled to start the inning. Travis sacrificed, but Vosmik made a sensational catch of West's low liner and Higgins made a spectacular play on Bluege's grounder.

The Red Sox got around to scoring against Weaver in the fifth when Vosmik singled to center. Then it was that Foxx thumped his homer high over the leftfield wall.

They tied the score in the sixth, when Ben Chapman opened up with a single to center and took second on Doerr's sacrifice. Desautels promptly singled to center to score Chapman.

Tightens Up Too Late.

After that, Weaver yielded only two hits, but one of 'em happened to be Doerr's single with Foxx on base in the tenth inning.

Pete Appleton will get his first starting assignment in several months when he takes the mound for the Nats tomorrow in the second game of the series.

Cecil Travis and Jimmy Foxx remained at a standstill in their race for the batting lead, with each making one hit in three trips to the plate.

New York Now Leading by 10 Games.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 19.—The New York Yankees' American League lead hit the ten-game mark today. The world champions combined a 14-hit attack with Spud Chandler's six-hit pitching to whip the Athletics, 5 to 2, while Cleveland's second-place Indians lost to Chicago.

The victory was Chandler's twelfth against three defeats for the season. After his mates staked him to a three-run lead in the second frame he was never threatened with defeat.

Every member of the Yankee line-up except Tommy Henrich and Joe Gordon hit safely at the expense of Line-drive Lynn Nelson, and, but for silly base-running in spots, Gehrig and company might have had two or three more runs.

Giants Beat Phillies, 4-2

Ripple's Homer in 6th Inside Park Is Winner.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 19.—Jimmy Ripple, filling in for the ailing Mel Ott, smashed a homer inside the park with a mate on base in the sixth inning today to break a tie and give the Giants a 4-to-2 victory over the Phillies.

The win enabled the Giants to pick up a half game on the National League leading Pittsburgh Pirates, and climb to within 4½ games of the pace setters, who were idle.

Rookie Bill Lohrman went the route for the first time this season and held the futile Phils to four hits, all of them in the first four frames. It was his eighth victory against one defeat.

Wild Bill Hallahan, who succeeded Claude Passeau in the fourth, after the latter strained his back while pitching, was charged with the defeat.

Harry Danning, who had hit a homer earlier, opened the sixth with a single, and Ripple hit one on a line out to centerfield. Hershel Martin, the Phils' centerfielder, might have played the ball better and held it to a single, but he came running in, tried to take the bounce with his bare hand, and missed. The ball rolled to the 488-foot mark and Ripple pranced around the bags.

The Giants started the scoring in the first inning on George Myatt's double and Danning's single, the first of Catcher Hank's three hits. Ripple came off the bench to play when Ott turned up with an ailing back.

The Phils scored in the second on Morrie Arnovich's single, Bill Cissell's error and an infield out, and tied it up in the fourth on Chuck Klein's two-bagger and Spud Davis' base hit.

Greenberg Hits Three Homers; Tops Babe's Mark; Tigers Win

Hank Has Total of 41 Thus Far; Scores: 8-7 and 7-4.

Detroit, Aug. 19.—Led by big Hank Greenberg, who drove out three homers to bring his season total to 41, the Detroit Tigers swept a double-header with the St. Louis Browns today, taking the opener, 8 to 7, and the nightcap, 7 to 4. The wins extended Detroit's victory streak to five straight.

Greenberg homered off Oral Hildebrand with the bases full in the fourth frame of the opener. In the last of the ninth he hit for the circuit with the sacks empty off Fred Johnson to break up the game.

Tops Babe's Record.

In the second game Greenberg homered in the first off Howard Mills with two mates on. The day's clouting put him ahead of Babe Ruth's pace of 1927 when the record of 60 was established. Ruth did not hit his forty-first homer until August 27. Until today Greenberg's best homer total was 40, set in 1937.

eorge McQuinn, Brown's first sacker, hit safely in both games to extend to 29 the number of successive games in which he has hit.

Another streak was halted when Billy Rogell, Tiger shortstop, rolled out in the third inning of the opener after having received seven successive bases on balls in three games.

Faltering Indians Are Beaten By Chisox, 7-2; Lee Holds Tribe

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 19.—Thornton Lee held the slipping Cleveland Indians to seven scattered hits today and the Chicago White Sox pounded two Tribal pitchers for 13 hits to win, 7-2.

Cleveland scored in the second inning when Hal Trosky drove his sixteenth home run of the year over the rightfield wall with Earl Averill on base. Marvin Owen and Joe Kuhel homered for the Six, both with the bases empty.

The victors reached Whitehill for 12 hits before he retired in the seventh. Lee, who previously had a double, singled to start the barrage that brought in Galehouse.

Gerry Walker, Sox outfielder, was hit in the right eye by his own foul tip in the fifth inning and was forced to leave the game, his face dripping blood. A stitch was taken in the gash over his eye and he said he would play tomorrow.

Bowers Defeats Nealis for Rock Creek Golf Crown

In This Corner

By Jack Cuddy.
United Press Sports Writer.

New York, Aug. 19.—When Ambers tangles with Armstrong the next time he'll "moider" him.

Henry Armstrong, Los Angeles Negro, wrested the lightweight championship from Lou Ambers Wednesday night by virtue of a split decision at Madison Square Garden. Ninety per cent of the 19,200 persons in the Garden disagreed with the decision. And they booed Armstrong to the skies when he left the ring possessing the featherweight, lightweight and welterweight championships. The fact that he had hammered out a brand-new chapter in pugilistic history by becoming the first man ever to hold three titles at the same time meant nothing to those Garden fans.

JACK CUDDY.

They didn't believe that Armstrong had won the 135-pound title from Ambers. But the majority of boxing writers at the ringside agreed that the decision was just. Most of the writers wondered how it could have been a split decision.

* * * *

I believe the decision was right. I say this although Ambers is my warmest friend among active fighters. I go further in stating that Ambers was lucky to last the full 15 rounds. Because I believe he fought the wrong kind of fight to beat the Los Angeles Negro.

Ambers gambled with the "suicide" plan of battle. He lost the title but he won respect from the public for the first time since he pulled on gloves more than six years ago.

Manager Al Weill, Trainer Charlie Goldman and Assistant Trainer Whitey Bimstein sold Ambers on the "suicide plan"—on the theory of keeping close to Armstrong and matching punches with him—instead of evading him with Ambers' usual dancing, jumping-jack style.

The "suicide plan" worked out all right, in the final analysis, except for the fact that Ambers lost his title. And titles do not grow on weeping willow trees. The "suicide plan" enabled Ambers to make the best showing of his career. Yet it wasn't a winning showing.

I have been arguing for two long days with Weill and Goldman and Bimstein about Ambers' tactics Wednesday night. I did not argue with Lou because I knew that Lou knew I was right. Lou would have fought his own fight if he hadn't received orders. And he would have won.

* * * *

I insist that Ambers with his speedy footwork, his elusive body movements and his rapid-fire counters—with left jabs and two-handed uppercuts—should have stayed away from Armstrong during the first six or seven rounds of the fight. He should have made Armstrong wear himself out waving at the air with his vicious swings. Then, when Armstrong started to tire, he should have started to move in—started to batter the fatigued Armstrong with uppercuts to the chin.

Had he followed such a plan of battle Lou would not have been floored in the fifth and sixth rounds. He would not have lost the first six or seven rounds by trying to swap punches with the greatest punch-swapper the ring has seen in years.

Despite the wrong technique that Ambers pursued in the early portion of the fight, his ruggedness and stamina enabled him to carry on and make a close fight of it. He had the "great" Armstrong on the verge of a kayo at the final bell.

When they meet again, this winter, Ambers will beat Armstrong, I am sure, because he will stay away from him in the first half of the fight—making the plunging, hooking Negro look like a monkey—and let him wear himself out by belting at the air. Then he will move in.

* * * *

And when Ambers moves in this time, maybe he will match Armstrong's elbowing, butting and low blows—move for move—because this Ambers is probably the toughest kid in America. He is one who learns from experience and always beats his men the second time. Tony Canzoneri and Pedro Montanez can tell you that.

Don't worry, Little Lou Ambers will recapture the lightweight crown from Armstrong. And when he does Armstrong will be in the hospital for a long, long time.

Quist, Bromwich Rout Henkel, Von Metaxa in 'Cup' Series.

By the Associated Press.

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 19.—Without the loss of a single set, Australia swept into the Davis Cup challenge round today when its unbeaten doubles team of Adrian Quist and Jack Bromwich easily scored the Antipodeans' third straight victory of the five-match interzone series with Germany.

It took the Aussies exactly one hour to pin a humiliating 6—2, 6—1, 6—4 defeat upon Henner Henkel and George von Metaxa, who were good enough to reach the doubles final at Wimbledon this year.

As they sent Australia into the challenge round for the twelfth time since cup play started in 1900—the Aussies have won six times and lost five—Quist and Bromwich were even better than the score indicated.

Victors over Don Budge and Gene Mako three times "down under" last year and picked by Vincent Richards, pro veteran, after today's match to beat the Americans in the Davis Cup final two weeks hence, they scored just about at will.

Make Few Errors.

They made only 23 errors in three sets to 64 by the Germans. In the nine sets played between the two teams so far, the Germans have failed to carry a single one to deuce, and have been able to take only 21 games in all.

"I should not be surprised if Australia won the cup from the United States," said Richards.

"Budge should win both his singles, but Quist and Bromwich should win the doubles. With Riggs playing his first Davis Cup match, he certainly can't beat Quist, and I doubt if Bobby can take Bromwich, either."

The ailing Henkel, who again wore a bandage on his right arm to protect his tennis elbow, was fully as impotent in the doubles today as he was in his singles route at the hands of Bromwich yesterday, and Metaxa wasn't much better.

His blond, blond hair falling over his face as he charged in vain, the world's third ranking player repeatedly shook his head in despair whenever—and it was often—a line drive off Bromwich's two-handed forehand streaked past him.

Best Mon on Court.

It was this shot of Bromwich, who was easily the best of the four men on the court, and Henkel's own service which were the deciding factors. Possessor of one of the mightiest deliveries in the game when he's right, Henkel's service was broken five of six times.

When his cannon-ball first serve missed the target—which also was often—Henkel instinctively attempted to favor his arm by easing up on the second serve, and the Aussies expectantly advanced onto the court a few feet to wait for the weaker second ball.

Bromwich's service was just as good as Henkel's was bad, the 19-year-old star winning all his seven games. Quist's was broken only once, although he had a close call in another when the ermans ran up a 40-love lead on him, only to lose the next six points in a row.

Lone solace for the Germans was the 6—4 set their reserve player, Rolf Goepfert, took from L. A. Schwartz, the Australian substitute, in an exhibition match which the Australian won, 6—1, 4—6, 6—1, 6—1.

The badly shattered ermans will attempt to save something tomorrow in the final two singles matches, which will be meaningless. Quist will play Henkel and Bromwich will meet Metaka.

Buck will fight on the card, however, and has been matched with Murray Kanner in a 8-round added attraction. He knocked out Kanner in the second round of their first bout, and probably will do it again. Kanner has been clamoring for a chance to redeem himself, and was ready and waiting at the church, or rather gy mdoor, when Ahearn called him to colors.

Paul Lee and Ray Ingram are booked for another added 8-round scrap.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald.
(WJSV-Wheaties Baseball Commentator.)

Each day, Arch McDonald distributes 10 points among the Nats whose play was most helpful to the Washington Club. At the end of each month The Washington Post will award to the leading player a gift in token of the honor of being The Post-Wheaties "Man of the Month."

Zeke Bonura increased his lead in the Man-of-the-Month Contest yesterday, when he starred for the Nats at Boston, despite the victory of the Red Sox. The ten points, on the basis of yesterday's play, were awarded as follows:

To Bonura, four points, because he singled to drive in two of the Nats' runs and because later in the game he led off the ninth inning with a single.

To Weaver, four points, because he pitched creditable ball in holding the Red Sox to ten hits over the ten-inning route and because he contributed two singles to the Nats' attack.

To Al Simmons, one point, because he doubled in the third inning and scored one of the Nats' runs.

To Ossie Bluege, one point, because he singled in the third inning to drive a run across.

The Score:

Allen's Mare Is Champion At Berryville

Clifton's Diana Clinches Title With Faultless Jump Performance.

Berryville, Va., Aug. 19.—The championship of the Berryville Horse Show was settled at the jumps today when Clifton's Diana, the good bay mare from Dr. L. M. Allen's Berryville Stables, made a faultless performance in the Clarke County Hunter Class to clinch the honors of the two-day exhibition.

Diana had enough points from yesterday's showing to put her ahead over Hunters Choice, an entry of Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, who added to his laurels the featured Corinthian, which wound up the day's showing. Allen had his first win in the touch-and-out class, winning with Clifton's Chatelaine. His horses were also third and fourth in the green hunter and the Clarke County hunters.

The green class had some of the best thoroughbreds of the mete. It was won by Royalty II from the Middleburg Stables, owned by E. L. Redman, who had managed to capture the half-bred 3-year-olds and had two victories to his credit from yesterday's showing.

The reenhalgh's hunt team of Hunter's Choice, Merry Prince and Brown Bruin made every jump a winning one in the hunt teams. This trio had plenty on the ball and accounted not only with performance but with appointments and conformation. Hunter's Choice was also credited with a second in the Clarke County Hunters and was second in the heavy and middleweight class.

Redman and Dr. E. H. Marsteller shared ribbons in the half-bred classes, with Stanley reen and David L. Belding winning pony events.

Combining the features of a county fair, raham Dougherty had a championship baby beef in a black angus. Other winners in these events were Cecil Wolfe, of Charles Town, with a Herford and Anne Duvall Fishpaw, of Berryville, showing a shorthorn.

Dodgers Nip Bees, 1 to 0

Lavagetto's Single in 11th Scores Hassett.

Brooklyn, Aug. 19.—Cookie Lavagetta's single with two out in the eleventh inning tonight sent the lone run of the ball game across to give the Dodgers a 1-to-0 victory over the Boston Bees and end Lou Fette's eight-game winning streak. A crowd of 24,649 cash customers turned out for the tilt.

Lavagetta's single was the sixth and last hit off Fette. Buddy Hassett opened the inning with a single, went to second when Dolph Camilli walked, and scored on Lavagetto's smash.

Fred Frankhouse, making his first pitching start in two months, held the Bees to three hits to chalk up his third win of the year.

The victory boosted the Dodgers into a tie for fifth place with the Bees in the National League race.

Rock Hall Regatta Will Open Today

Rock Hall, Md., Aug. 19 (AP).—Sportsmen from Chesapeake Bay waterways gathered here tonight for the opening tomorrow of the Rock Hall Yacht Club's Regatta that will offer them two days of racing.

Most of those here tonight and those expected early tomorrow were skippers of sailing craft, for this week-end show is to be all but a strictly sailboat affair, with only two events listed for power boats. The latter are for work boats.

Sportsmen from Riverton, N. J., Cambridge, Baltimore, St. Michaels, Gibson Island, Chestertown and other bay yacht clubs are expected to be represented in the competition for sailboats including a wide variety of classes.

Mink, Partner Retain Title

Defeat Jacob, Gordon for Girls' Crown.

The uphill challenge of blonde Betty Jacob and her tiny Montrose partner, Harriet Gordon, to gain the junior doubles tennis championship of the Department of Playgrounds was frustrated yesterday by the defending title holders, Molly Thompson and Margo Mink, of Chevy Chase Plyaground.

Beaten badly in the first set, Miss Thompson and Miss Mink relied on their superior stamina and finally wore down their slightly built opponents in the second and third sets to win by scores of 1—6, 8—6, 6—4. The setting on the Chevy Chase courts duplicated the finals of last year in which yesterday's victors triumphed over Miss Jacob and Miss Gordon to win their first title.

Miss Jacob's slashing forehand shots and accurate service paced the Montrose pair to an easy victory in the first set of what turned out to be the summer's outstanding playground match. She was the standout player on the court, whaling the ball with a vicious speed and precision which belied her 15 years and frail build.

Midway of the second set, however, Miss Jacobs began to tire badly and became erratic. Then Miss Thompson and Miss Mink, who still had plenty in reserve, turned on the heat and pumped the ball into all corners, kept Miss Jacobs and Miss Gordon continually on the run and eventually retained their laurels.

In the third set, Miss Gordon, like Miss Jacob a student at Western High School, played her best tennis of the afternoon, but was unable to stem the tide. The Montrose team stayed on even terms with their opponents until the score reached 3-all. Then Miss Thompson and Miss Mink went ahead, 5—3, and had match point in the ninth game.

But Miss Gordon staved off the end single-handedly with several beautiful recoveries and placed the score at 5—4. Then the Chevy Chase combination broke Miss Jacobs' service to seal the victory.

Miss Thompson attends the Cathedral School for Girls and Miss Mink the Holton Arms School.

Meets Colonial Heights in Final Today.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Aug. 19.—Dick Ayers, Doug Morgan and Russ Kidwell will play with the Warsaw A. C. tomorrow when it meets the Colonial Heights nine in the rubber game of the current series.

T. E. Beach, who manages the Alexandria Cardinals along with the Celtics, has booked Farmville for a game Wednesday, August 24. The down-State nine preferred to play the Cardinals instead of the Celts. The Cardinals have won seven games in a row since the team organized June 20. Most of the players are members of the strong Washington Post northern Virginia loop.

Dodo Robinson, coach of the Alexandria Dr. Pepper Nine, will enter Maryland University this fall. Robinson is a lineman and stands six feet and weighs 185.

Plans for the Labor Day handicap tournament at Belle Haven Country Club are nearing completion under the direction of President Andy Clarke.

Medalist Rallies To Win, 4 and 3

Favorite Finishes With Bold Golf; Anne Dolan Loses to Hutchinson; Suess Defeats McCredie for First Tournament Victory.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Bobby Bowers, medalist and favorite in the Rock Creek Midsummer Tournament, saved a winning punch for the final nine yesterday as he defeated George Nealis by a 4-and-3 margin to win the first tournament of the year over the uptown public links layout.

One down and 8 to play, Bowers finished 3-3-3-3-5, 2 under par, winning every hole to clinch the match on the fifteenth green after they battled 28 holes with neither gaining more than a one-hole advantage. Bowers had a 76 in the morning and needed par for a 70 in the afternoon, while Nealis was five shots higher.

Anne Dolan, the host club golfing waitress, lost to Eddie Hutchinson, schoolboy linksman in the second flight finals on the eighteenth green, but, regardless, her tournament debut was a successful one as she set a new mark for women golfers in Rock Creek tourneys.

Anthony Suess, The Washington Post's printing putter, won the third flight, his first victory in several years of steady play in municipal tournaments, defeating Claude McCredie by a 3 and 1 margin. McCredie had previously beaten Mrs. Suess in the second round but found two members of the Suess family just too much for one tournament.

Bowers and Nealis could not have been better matched for the first 29 holes. Bowers was out in 37 and Nealis made 38 for the first nine but they were all even. Nealis had a one hole advantage at lunch but at the three-quarter mark the eventual winner had evened the match.

Nealis won the twenty-seventh with a par but it was the last hole he won as Bowers mixed three pars and two birdies on the next five holes as Nealis found the woods twice and chipped poorly on two greens.

Bowers' victory stamps him as one of the most promising youngsters in local municipal golf, and the Rock Creek fans are boosting him as the future city champion. He was extended only once in the four matches after winning the medal.

Star Divers Compete Tonight In Airport Pool's Open Meet

Tarbett, Krider and Marshall to Show Wares; A. A. U. Officials to Direct.

An outstanding field of fancy divers, headed by Bill Tarbett, the District champion; H. S. Krider, Kansas champion; John Marshall, former D. C. and Florida titlist, and Fred Steiber, South Atlantic champion, is entered in the open highboard and lowboard diving meet to be held tonight at Airport Pool. The meet starts at 8 o'clock. There is no admission charge.

Krider, Marshall and Steiber are expected to supply Tarbett with stiff competition, although the latter is rated the favorite in both classes. He recently retained the highboard and lowboard District crowns, the former at Washington Golf and Country Club, and the latter at Takoma only this week. Krider is particularly effective off the highboard.

Hunter Reinburg and Freeman Strickland are the other District men given a fine chance to finish high in the standings. Both pushed Tarbett for honors in the Takoma lowboard events.

All competitors must execute the following compulsory dives: plain front, running; backward dive, standing; half gainer, running; backward jack-knife, standing, and forward half-twist, running. They must also do five optional dives.

Two beautiful 18-inch trophies with swimmers mounted on silver columns will be awarded the winners in each class. There are also attractive medals for the second and third place winners.

The meet is sponsored by the pool management, sanctioned by the A. A. U. and will be directed by A. A. U. officials. More than 1,500 spectators can be accommodated in seats at the pool and there will be standing room for several hundred more, according to Hardy Pearce, pool manager.

In addition to the entrants mentioned above, the following divers are entered: Charles Johnston, Andrew Horton, Mike Schaeffer, Irving Bridges, John Walker, Thomas Larner and Harry Neilsen, all of Washington; Joe McGuire and Jimmy Russell, of Baltimore, and Bill Taylor, of Cumberland, Md.

Mrs. Giles Ties Marion Brown in Ladies' Tourney

Mrs. K. S. Giles, southpaw stroker from Indian Spring, and Marion Brown, Manor's District champion, tied in the ladies' day 4-5-6 tournament over the Four Corners' course yesterday, with four 4s.

Mrs. Giles won the ladies' day tournament Wednesday at Beaver Dam, yesterday's victory being her second of the week. Miss Brown had an 83 for the round, but had more threes and fives than the number she selected.

Mrs. J. H. Bullock had ten 5s and Mrs. Gertrude Lever eight 6s, to win the respective classes among the members.

Mrs. J. A. Marr, Columbia, paced the guests in the four class with three, while Mrs. Arnold McNitt, Congressional, had 12 5s, and Mrs. Frank Kramer, Manor, ten 6s.

Alice Marble Gains Final

By the Associated Press.

Manchester, Mass., Aug. 19.—It will be blonde Alice Marble, the former national champion, against 21year-old Nancye Wynne, the spectacular newcomer from Oustralia, in both finals of the Essex County Club's invitation women's tennis tournament here tomorrow.

Top-seeded Miss Marble reached the singles today with a 7—5, 6—2 victory over England's pretty Kay Stammers in the rubber match of their careers. Then she paired with Mrs. Marshal Fabyan, of Brookline, to eliminate Mrs. Carolyn Babcock Stark, of New York, and Mrs. John Van Ryn, of Austin, Tex., 6—3, 6—2, and gain the doubles final.

Miss Wynne, who attained the singles final yesterday by defeating Mrs. Fabyan, advanced to the last round of the pairs tournament with her Australian teammate, Dorothy Stevenson, beating the second seeded tandem of Dorothy Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., and Dorothy Workman, of Los Angeles, 6—3, 6—0.

When Miss Marble and Miss Wynne clash tomorrow for the singles title, they will supplant a champion who has held the title 24 hours. Ever since rain washed out the 1937 final between Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, of New York, and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, the title has been vacant, but today, after a year's lapse, the two finally got together, and Mrs. Andrus won, 6—4, 6—4, in a listless match.

Veteran's Netmen Win.

The Veterans Administration tennis team defeated the Patent Office racquet wielders, 4 to 1, yesterday on the Mall Courts.

Weiss and Silva (V) defeated Woods and Moncure, 6—2, 6—1; Weiksner and Solodolski (V) defeated Lidoff Levy, 6—4, 3—6, 6—4; Steininger and Hager defeated Lavenwell and Greenwell, 2—6, 7—5, 6—4; Haymaker and Fisher (V) defeated Vaughn and Ullner, 6—0, 6—0, and Turner and Pratt (V) lost to Hill and Wye, 8—10, 2—6, 4—6.

11th Victory At Meet for Young Rider

Accidental Wins From Juveniles; Trainer Is Suspended.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fair Grounds, Cumberland, Md., Aug. 19.—Beverly Hacker, in riding the winner in the G. C. Murphy Purse, feature mile-and-one-sixteenth race, run before a West Virginia Day crowd of 9,000, registered his eleventh victory, which assures him the gold watch offered to the leading winning rider during the Cumberland Fair Association's ten-day meeting, ending tomorrow.

Hacker sent Mirmiss on top at the break. The filly raced wide turning for home, but managed to hang on long enough to score by a head over Miss B. Faulconer's Scout Rose. Both horses are Virginia owned. Mrs. J. Smith's Pretty Lass raced into third place.

Accidental, a first-time starter, belonging to H. M. Simpson, of Washington, who had been working briskly over this strip, ran true to morning's trial, capturing the day's five-eighths opener. She paid $9.

The 6½ furlongs of the second saw A. L. Leith's Cagey make every post a winning one, Fans coupling the mare with Accidental in the daily double collected $55.50.

The Sears Roebuck Purse, five-eighths secondary feature, resulted in a driving victory for J. B. Huyett's Never Home. The mare, after following the pace into the stretch, came away to a length victory.

Leon Garrett and Basil A. Hall's Shaggy Ann proved the winning combination in the fourth, run over the 6½-furlong route. The mare was atop the pace from the "off bell" and just lasted to win by a nose.

C. E. Willson, trainer of Channing, who placed to Bargain Boy in yesterday's sixth race, was suspended for the meeting for being abusive to the stewards. Willson thought Bargain Boy should have been disqualified and the purse given to Channing. The stewards thought otherwise. In addition to the suspension, the stewards referred the case to the Maryland Racing Commission for further action.

Coat Tails, who broke down during yesterday's seventh race, was later destroyed.

Landlubber Wins At Narragansett.

Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 19 (AP).—Moving from fifth place at the head of the stretch to win by a nose over S. P. Lemmik's tiring Jubal Junior W. C. Johnson's Landlubber today won the Nantucket Purse, mile and 70-yard feature at Narragansett Park to pay $6.90.

Jubal Junior paid $4.60 to place and finished two lengths in front of Galadore that paid $2.90 to show.

The 7-year-old gelded son of Gallant Fox made a stretch charge from seventh place to take down third money a length in front of Chance Sweet.

Timed in 1:43 1-5 the winner was scoring his first victory of the year in 12 starts. The judges called for a photograph before hanging his number up as the winner.

Jubal Junior led all the way until he faltered before the final drive of the winner. In the early stages of the race it was O. B. Nearley's Candle Ends that offered him the most contention but was not able to meet the drive of Landlubber and Galadore and finished out of the money.

Jockey Pariso Stars At Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Nunzio Pariso, leading apprentice rider at Washington Park, gave the longshot players three thrills today, bringing home Pandonna, a 32 to 1 shot in the fifth race, after scoring with Happy Helen which paid $10.80 and Jens Son at $7.60, in the second and third events, respectively.

Pandonna, almost overlooked in the wagering, rushed into contention in the first few strides. As the field turned into the stretch, Pandonna moved up to challenge Woodsia, the pace-setter. They fought it out all the way down the stretch with Pandonna gaining a head decision. Chief Nadi was third, well back of Woodsia. The winner ran six furlongs in 1.13 and paid off at $66.60 for $2 straight.

Matterhorn Jolts Saratoga Choices.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 19 (AP).—Mrs. H. C. Phipps' Matterhorn, unable to get close in recent maiden races, today flashed a remarkable effort to win the thirty-sixth Adirondack Handicap, which completed the trio of major stakes at the meeting for two-year-old fillies. The fickle daughter of Diavolo-Helvetia, coupled with Short Rations and held at 12-to 1, came from last place in the field of eight to win by a head.

C. S. Howard's Gray Nurse, third in the spinaway and second in the Schuylerville, the other fixtures for the flappers of the turf, outlasted J. H. Whitney's Easy Does It by a half length for the place. Easy Does It, an entry with Merry Jingle, was a slight favorite over Grey Nurse at 2 to 1.

Matterhorn's first success in five races was worth $4,250 to her owner.

War Admiral And Esposa Clash Today

Riddle Star to Seek $3,000 Purse in Distance Race.

By the Associated Press.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 19. The blankets come off War Admiral again tomorrow and Samuel Riddle's great son of Man o' War had better be ready.

The Admiral will be heavily backed in the Whitney Pprse, $3,000 added, but it will be a tough struggle if William Ziegler, jr.'s, great mare, Esposo, runs to her true form.

Esposa was only three-fifths of a second off Saratoga's track record in winning the recent Champlain Handicap of a mile and a furlong. The added distance of the Whitney which is run at 1¼ miles will be to Esposa's liking for the 6-year-old daughter of Espino—Quick Batter can run all day.

Whether she will elect to run in her best form none can say, however. She runs almost as many bad races as good ones.

Only three others were named for the Whitney—the Belair Stud's Fighting Fox and Isolater and Mrs. E. Graham Lewis' Great Union. Of these Fighting Fox looks most formidable, but the experts can't see him finishing any better than third.

The secondary feature, the Grand Union Hotel Stakes, has drawn a list of 15 2-year-olds headed by the Greentree Stable entry of Hash and Third Degree; the Milky Way Farm pair of No Competition and On Location, and George D. Widener's High Scope. This 6-furlong sprint will be worth about $12,800.

Freight Cuts For Exports Advance Grains

Wheat Rises 1 Cent and Corn 1½ Cents on Announcement.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—Stirred by correct indications beforehand of notable freight rate changes that would facilitate exports, corn rose 1½ cents a bushel today and wheat 1 cent.

Highest prices of the day both for corn and wheat were current in the final transactions. An added stimulus as to corn values came from estimates that 600,000 bushels of corn had been bought today for export.

After the day's dealings were ended, formal announcement was made that railroads would reduce reshipping rates from Chicago to the Atlantic Seaboard 10 cents a hundred pounds for export grain. This means a saving of 6 cents a bushel on wheat and 5.6 cents a bushel on corn, effective October 1 to December 1.

Cotton Higher; December 8.37

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Cotton turned higher today following opening losses as moderate Wall Street and local buying revealed a scarcity of offerings. December advanced from 8.28 to 8.37 and closed at the high, with final prices 4 to 7 points net higher.

The market opened 1 to 2 points lower with the influence of steady Liverpool cables, offset by a small volume of Southern and foreign selling. Trade buying absorbed these offers, and for several hours prices moved irregularly over a range of a few points. Firmness of stocks and grains in the afternoon attracted some buying and further complaints of cop deterioration in eastern and western parts of the belt contributed to the advance.

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks, Bonds, Wheat, Corn and Cotton Recover as Trading Increases.

New York, Aug. 19.—Stock prices rose on rumors and reacted on facts today but held the largest part of their early gains at the finish. Bonds also made good headway, particularly in the carrier group. Wheat, corn and cotton recovered. Volume of dealings in most markets was larger than that of the previous day. Stock transactions at 825,680 shares was nearly double Thursday's turnover.

The upswing in share equities developed in the morning under an assorted leadership and picked up momentum when tickers printed an announcement from Washington that the American Association of Railroads would have an important announcement at 2:30 p. m., or half an hour before the close. Nimble witted traders jumped to the conclusion that the statement would disclose an agreement between the carriers and union brotherhoods for a pay cut. In view of the fact that the current carrier problem—like that of the Federal Administration—is a disparity between revenue and operating expenses, this guess, widely credited, was fact that the carriers' greatest difficulty—like that of the Federal Government—is that they usually have to spend much more money than they take in, it is small wonder the financial district seized upon the guess of a general wage cut as a bull point. Stocks consequently advanced easily, with rail issues in the van.

Leaders Active.

The day's most active list included pivotal industrials of most of the more important groups, including railroads, steels, metals, rubbers, chemicals and aviations, as well as the motors.

Steel common ended at 58⅜, up ⅝, although about 1 point under its best level of the day. Bethlehem added 1½ points net after being ahead more than 2 points at one time Early gains in the rails were cut about in half. Mail order shares were strong, Sears adding 2 and Montgomery Ward ⅞. Anaconda went to 34⅞, but ended at 34¼ for a net rise of ⅞.

Johns Manville attracted buyers on cheerful reports from the building construction industry and firmed 2⅛. Gains of 1 to 2 points were recorded by Western Electric, Union Pacific, Goodyear, General Electric, duPont, Atchison, Chesapeake & Ohio, American Smelting, American Can and Allied Chemical. Of 698 issues traded, 443 advanced, against 117 declines and 138 unchanged. The turnover of the 15 most active stocks, which accounted for one-third of the total volume, was unusual, as the ratio for this select group is usually in the neighborhood of 25 per cent of the market.

Dun's reported that retail trade has been unable to make much progress in the last week, and "that it is evident, in most branches of trade, sentiment is holding better than actual buying."

Bond Market Firm.

There was a wide scattering of strength in the bond market, particularly in the more speculative issues, and the volume of trading, though still slack, was improved over the previous day's total. United States Government bonds were generally firm at or near the best prices of the year. High-grade corporate issues were steady.

The index of 30 bonds advanced 0.29 of a point, with only the ten high-grade rails showing a loss for the day, and that loss amounted to only 0.01 of a point. The five second-grade rails shot upward 1.44 points, while the ten industrials were up 0.2 to 0.16, and the five utilities 0.02.

Strongest of all the actively traded issues were the Interborough Rapid Transits. The I. R. T. convertible 7s climbed 5¼ points and the 6s and 5s were up 1⅞ and 1½ points, respectively. These issues were extending their gains of Thursday, which followed hard on the news that the constitutional convention had approved a resolution exempting from New York City's debt limit the bonds necessary for the transit unification program. B. M. T. 4½s of 1966 rose to 67½ but lost ground later and closed ¼ point net lower at 66¼.

In the second grade rail group B. & O. issues advanced from ⅛ to 1⅞ points, Atlantic Co

Hot Weather In Past Week Curbs Trade

Retail Sales Throughout the U. S. Average 10 to 15% Under Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 19.—Hot weather this week scared prospective shoppers away from the Nation's stores and retarded retail trade for the second week in a row, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

Retail sales at leading centers of distribution continued dull and averaged 8 to 15 per cent, under last year for the country as a whole.

Wholesale trade proceeded in second gear along with retail sales. Wholesale buying in the aggregate averaged 10 to 22 per cent under a year ago.

"Harassed by unbroken heat waves, retail trade again failed to reach the sales level that had been presaged by the good response to August promotional events in the first week of the month," the credit agency said.

"Hardest hit were fur and winter coat sales, merchants complaining that customers showed no interest in trying on heavy apparel at current temperatures.

Furniture Promotions.

"Furniture promotions were less affected; in some stores sales were reported up to or ahead of last year, but in the majority they continued spotty, and generally 6 to 12 per cent below the previous week.

"Establishments handling ice cream, soft drinks or beer found the weather a boon to sales. Many were confident that large losses suffered in July, due to rain and unseasonably low temperatures, would be affected by unusually good August returns.

"Weather was a prime factor affecting consumer buying in almost every section of the country."

City Manager Carl L. Budwesky, State School Architect Raymond V. Long and Supt. of Schools T. C. Williams held a conference last night in the office of the city manager on the proposed new elementary school for which bids were recently rejected Th city council has figured on an approximate cost of $150,000, this amount to include cost of the land upon which the school is to be built, and the only bids received were for $183,900 and 188,601.

The regular monthly promenade of Volture Locale. No. 934, Forty and Eight Society of the American Legion, was held last night. New officers were installed and reports of the grand promenade in Charlottesville last week were given.

Maj. Oscar Myers is chef de guerre of the voiture. The business meeting was preceded by a supper served by members of the auxiliary.

William H. Melchoir, of this city, has been notified of the death on Thursday, in St. Louis, Mo., of his brother, Aleck W. Melchoir, 70, a former resident of Alexandria. Mrs. William H. Melchoir died on Thursday, August 12, just one week before her brother-in-law.

Judge Louis C. Barley, member of Alexandria City Council, has filed suit in Fairfax County circuit court for divorce from Mrs. Helen Cant Barley. He also filed annulment proceedings against Mrs. Barley, alleging that she was legally incapable of entering into matrimony at the time of their marriage, March 18, 1937. He charges cruelty and abandonment.

Judge Barley has been a member of the city council from the Second Ward for two terms, his last term expiring on September 1. He refused to be a candidate in the election of June 14, as he had moved to Fairfax County, near Belle Haven, and stated he would claim legal residence there.

The suit is to be heard at the September term of the circuit court.

Englih Speedster Reaches 300 M.P.H.

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Aug. 19 (AP).—John Cobb, of fingland, streaked across the desert today in a test run of his low-slung silvered speedster at a top speed of approximately 300 miles an hour.

Capt. George E. T. Eyston, who also is here from England to attack his own world record for the measured mile, witnessed his rival's flashing performance.

Eyston set the present mark of 311.41 miles an hour here last November.

"The car performed perfectly, and I am ready to go after the record attempt without another test run," said Cobb.

Jascha Heifetz and Family Pose at California Beach

Non-musical moment for music master, Jascha Heifetz, famous violinist, came at Balboa Beach, Calif., where the Heifetz family spent a vacation. Mrs. Heifetz was formerly Florence Vidor, of screen fame. Their children are Josepha (left), 8, and Robert, 6. The violinist had just concluded his twentieth American concert season with appearances in New York and Los Angeles.

'Flying Showcase' Tested by Army Air Corps

To "take a gander" over "enemy" territory, the Army Air Corps uses its latest acquisition, a three-place observation plane dubbed the "flying showcase" because of its extensive use of transparent panes around the cockpit. It's shown in flight over Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio. The "flying showcase" has one 850-horsepower motor and a retractable landing gear.

Booking Games.

The Washington Post Circulators are seeking a Sunday game with an out of town opponent having a field. The Circulators are anxious to schedule a tilt for Labor Day. White Oaks, Capitol Heights, Remington Athletic Club and the Winchester nine are especially challenged. Call N. M. Outcault at Potomac 2004, or write to 1836 Sixteenth street northwest.

Rumor Has Crouse Through as Pilot

Baltimore, Aug. 19 (AP).—An indication that Manager Bucky Crouse will be dismissed as pilot of the Baltimore Orioles game today from John B. Ogden, general manager of the International League team.

From Toronto, Ogden telegraphed: "For next year, we need two outfielders, a shortstop, a second baseban, and one more pitcher in addition to what we have and what we have coming up. Also a leader, not a martyr."

Ogden some time ago announced Crouse definitely would finish out the season as manager of the Orioles, now trailing the league after an auspicious start.

The name of Rogers Hornsby, with the Orioles for a time before going to Chattanooga as manager, has been mentioned most prominently as a likely selection to succeed Crouse.

Wants Game.

Life is mostly like a game of put and take, only some fellas will take without askin' questions but will freeze up when it comes to puttin.' Grandpa Snazzy, though, isn't one of that kind, he always believed in tit-for-tat.

I remember one time he went into the bank at Van Buren to borrow $200 to make a deal he had his heart set on. When the banker asked him what security he had, grandpa said, "Two hundred horses." The banker lent him the money.

Later on grandpa came back with a big roll of bills and peeled off $200 and the interest and paid it to the man and started to put the rest back in his pocket. The banker said, "Why don't you let us keep the rest of the money for you?" Grandpa looked him right in the eye and said, "How many horses you got?"

Rejected Suitor Kills Beloved, Asks for Chair

Britisher Uses Shotgun to Blow Off Head of Inamorata.

By the United Press.

New York, Aug. 19.—A slim, young Englishman walked into an East Side police station today, accompanied by a Catholic priest, and told the desk sergeant he had just blown off the back of his sweetheart's head with a sawed-off shotgun because she refused to marry him.

Talking in precise, clipped accents, the young man said his name was John Bellinger, 33, gave the police an address where he said they would find the girl's body, and added:

"I prefer to die. I hope they put me in the electric chair."

Priest Believes Him.

The Rev. Joseph Sheehan, of the Church of St. John, nodded as the young man told his story and said he believed it to be true. He said Bellinger came into his rectory at about 2 a. m. and told him what had happened.

Police found the body of the girl, Miss Marie Joyce, a pretty, 25-year-old brunette, sprawled in the corridor of the apartment house where she lived. They knocked at the door and Miss Marie Townsend, the slain girl's roommate, appeared. She took one look at the body, screamed and fainted.

Back at the police station Bellinger told his story. He said he was a clerk in an advertising firm, and that he met the girl a year ago when he came here from San Francisco. He wanted to marry her, he said, but she "put him off."

Dances, Then Kills.

Yesterday he telephoned to ask her to meet him. He took the shotgun, sawed off so it would fit in a bag, and met her in a restaurant. They had dinner and danced. He told her he "couldn't live without her" and asked her to announce their engagement. She refused.

He said they returned to her apartment and as she stooped over to put the key into the lock he felt that he would "never see her again." So he pulled the shotgun from the bag and pulled the trigger.

"Of course, I realize now that I made a serious mistake," the young man said. "We could have been the best of friends, but I wanted to marry her and she would not have it."

He said he left the apartment house, walked a block and then took a cab to his room. After throwing away a fistful of spare cartridges, he hid two razor blades in his shoes and walked to the rectory of the nearest Catholic church, where he told his story to Father Sheehan.

Blades Taken from Him.

The priest listened to his story and then offered to accompany him to a police station. On the way to jail he stooped to remove a razor blade from his shoe and a detective saw it and took both blades from him.

Bellinger, getting nervous as the hours passed, gave his name jerkily in the police line-up and was taken to Homicide Court, where the case was put over until September 2.

He said he was born in Sussex, England, and came to this country by way of Canada in 1927. After the legal formalities were concluded, the prisoner appeared relieved.

"All I want now," he said, "is to get it over with quickly."

Maritime Bureau Will Buy 90% of Dollar Line Stock

By the Associated Press.

The Maritime Commission announced yesterday it had entered into an agreement with the Dollar Steamship Lines of San Francisco whereby the commission plans to acquire 90 per cent of the company's voting stock.

The commission said that on successful completion of the plan, operations generally would remain in the hands of the company. Terms of the agreement, the announcement said, are contingent on subsequent granting of a five-year operating differential subsidy, now being worked out by commission experts and expected to approximate $3,000,000 a year; the granting of a $1,500,000 loan by the commission for repairing and rehabilitating the company's fleet of 12 vessels, only 4 of which are now in operation; and the granting of a $2,500,000 RFC loan to provide the company with working capital. The commission said working capital at present is "practically exhausted."

N.Y. Police Taken For a Ride, All Because of Love

New York, Aug. 19 (U.P.).—Margaret O'Brien's boy friend is invited to call at the police station at Bay Shore, N. Y., for some conversation in words of one syllable.

Margaret's boy friend called the station and left this message with Lieut. Joseph Walsh:

"Please notify Margaret O'Brien, Ronkonkoma, L. I., to call John 4-1898 in regard to a seaplane."

The message was sent by teletype to headquarters, and Lieut. Charles La Farge sent a State policeman to deliver the message. The policeman rode 40 miles. It seems that that trouble was that Miss O'Brien's boy friend did not receive a letter from her yesterday.

N. D. Preacher Gets Life for Maid's Murder

Pastor Tried to Burn Her Body by Firing His Own House.

By the Associated Press.

Mandan, N. Dak., Aug. 19.—The Rev. Helo Janssen, 51, began a life term in the penitentiary today for poisoning on Monday a 16-year-old girl. He confessed he killed the girl because she was about to become a mother and burned his home in an attempt to conceal the body.

The girl, Alma Kruckenberg, one of a family of ten children, had been working for the Evangelical Lutheran minister since the first of the year. Her body was found in the embers of the 10-room parsonage Monday night. The Rev. Mr. Janssen was questioned for two days and nights beginning Tuesday.

Last night he admitted the crime and angry bands of people and farmers gathered at the county jail. Court was convened about midnight, the Rev. Mr. Janssen pleaded guilty and immediately was sentenced to life imprisonment. He arrived at State Prison today.

"I know I have done wrong—it was the devil in me," the pastor said.

D.C. Police 'Nearly' Kidnap Babies in Impounding Auto

Motorcycle Policeman Charles Scott was doing duty yesterday and almost missed seeing a 2-year-old girl and a 2-month-old baby perched in the rear seat of a car he had just ordered impounded for a traffic violation.

Policeman Scott spotted the car in a no-parking area at Ninth and D streets northwest, and called for the tow truck. At a signal from Scott, the police crane fastened its hooks on the car and was about to hoist away when Scott cried out, "Hold it!"

Asleep in the rear seat of the car were the two babies, the oldest of whom was able to tell the bewildered Mr. Scott that "Mummie has gone shopping." After a scratch of the head, Scott decided a ticket would cover the situation—and besides, "I'm not going to be charged for kidnaping," he said.

U. S. May Revoke Dentist's Papers

Possibility that revocation of the naturalization of Dr. Wilfred Stanley Duhaney, now of May Pen, Jamaica, will be effected in District Court was seen yesterday when Assistant United States Attorney Allen J. Krouse filed a petition suggesting that the Government wishes to cancel his naturalization and certification of citizenship because he has refused to register with the American consul at Kingston.

A dentist, Dr. Duhaney was admitted to citizenship here in 1932. The same year he left this country and has since been in Jamaica. Before becoming an American citizen, Dr. Duhaney was a British citizen. Under the action taken yesterday he will be declared an alien unless he submits a satisfactory reply within 60 days.

Suspect Held for Jury In Stabbing of Woman

Charged with assault with a dangerous weapon in connection with the stabbing of Helen Hutchison Wednesday, Anthony John Cardilla, 25, of the 500 block of Tenth street northwest, yesterday was held for the grand jury when he waived preliminary hearing in Police Court.

Judge John P. McMahon set Cardilla's bond at only $1,000 when it was reported that Miss Hutchison was greatly improved and had been released from Emergency Hospital. Cardilla was arrested in Maryland on a bus bound for New York, after an alleged quarrel with Miss Hutchison in her home, 1008 I street northwest.

U. S. Union Hits Rival's Aid to Rep. O'Connor

C. I. O. Affiliate Scores A. F. L. Group for Indorsing 'Obstructionist.'

The United Federal Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, yesterday denounced the American Federation of Government Employes, A. F. of L. affiliate, for the congratulatory letter the A. F. G. E. sent Representative O'Connor for his efforts in defeating the President's reorganization bill.

The C. I. O. units recalled that President Roosevelt several days ago referred to O'Connor, who is chairman of the House Rules Committee and a Democratic candidate for renomination on September 20, as "the most effective obstructionist" in Congress, and that the A. F. G. E.'s congratulatory letter had been publicized by O'Connor just before the President's rebuke to the New York Representative.

The A. F. G. E., the statement held, has shown "uncanny timing for doing exactly the wrong thing at exactly the wrong time." Regretting it had to engage in interunion "sniping," the U. F. W. A. said it was "duty bound" to call such practice to public notice. The A. F. G. E., it said, has "joined hands with the enemies of labor."

Wrote Other Congressmen.

Col. Charles I. Stengle, president of the A. F. G. E., recalled that his congratulatory letter to O'Connor was written on April 15, and that similar letters were written all Congressmen who contested the reorganization bill.

"O'Connor not only hamstrung the reorganization bill, but he sought to scuttle wages and hours legislature," the U. F. W. A. statement said. "The reorganization bill, had it passed, would have extended reclassification to the field, would, indeed, have covered into civil service thousands of employes that not even the President's June executive orders will touch."

"Unclassified Federal employes still in A. F. G. E. ranks, the Internal Revenue group, those in AAA, FHA and other agencies, must, to understate it, feel sheepish."

Condemns Indorsement.

Jacob Baker, U. F. W. A. president, commented that "Representative O'Connor perhaps had been misled by a statement of the American Federation of Government Employes. Many of the field locals of that organization," he said, "condemned the attitude of their national office on the reorganization bill and continue to condemn its indorsement of Representative O'Connor.

"Those Federal employes living in Representative O'Connor's district who are denied inclusion in the classified civil service, know that Representative O'Connor did not represent them in connection with the reorganization bill and will undoubtedly make their view felt in the election," Baker observed.

Stengle denied that disaffection resulted from the A. F. G. E.'s attitude toward the reorganization bill. Only one lodge expressed disagreement, he stated, adding that he was "not excited" over the U. F. W. A.'s attempt "to make news in August of something that occured in April."

Son Held as Killer Of Mother Seeking $11 of Her Relief

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Max Harris, 38, was held without bail today on a charge of killing his mother because she asked him for $11 from her relief check so she could pay the rent. Detective Nicholas Santamorena said Harris had $4,500 in the bank.

Four Are Released In Sanford Killing

Four colored men questioned yesterday in the fatal shooting last Saturday of George Sanford, 20, were released as police entered their seventh day of investigation into the mysterious killing.

Though three youths, companions of Sanford the night his body was left on an operating table at Children's Hospital, are in custody, Lieut. George E. Darnall, chief of the homicide squad, said yesterday that questioning them and the colored men had developed nothing new. Lieut. Darnall said he believed the shooting was accidental.

Statements of the youths, Darnall said, led police to believe Sanford and the three boys were riding with a colored man whom they attempted to rob. In the process, the theory goes, one youth was beating the man over the head with a pistol when it was discharged, the bullet wounding one boy in the hand and striking Sanford above the heart.

Police Continue Search For 2 Md. Jailbreakers

Washington Police last night continued their hunt for two of six convicts who Wednesday escaped from jail at Hagerstown, Md., and who are believed to have driven to this city and abandoned a stolen auto.

The men, James Lucas, 20, and Raymond Mitchell, 26, escaped from jail after they had knocked down Deputy Sheriff Leister Isanogle with a bottle. The others were seized a short time after the break.

Navy Establishes Precedence Rules For Flying Cadets

By the Associated Press.

The Navy Department set up rules of precedence yesterday for its newest personnel category—Naval Reserve Aviation Cadets.

A notice to all ships and stations from Rear Admiral J. O. Richardson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, said the status of the cadets "is considered as that of junior officers analagous to midshipmen formerly ordered to sea as passed midshipmen after graduation from the Naval Academy."

Admiral Richardson's notice said that in view of such status, precedence of aviation cadets is determined as follows: (1) Ensigns, U. S. N. and U. S. N. R.; (2) commissioned warrant officers, U. S. N. and U. S. N. R.; (3) aviation cadets; (4) midshipmen, and (5) warrant officers, U. S. N. and U. S. N. R.

Women Called Better Night Drivers Than Men

French Lick, Ind., Aug. 19 (AP).—Women are just as good automobile drivers as men, the highway safety educational department of the Aetna Life Insurance Co. reported today.

Men react a little more quickly, Barnett L. Golub, of Hartford, Conn., in charge of the department's driving tests, told a company meeting here. But the women are better night drivers.

Roosevelt Sets Wallace Parley For Tomorrow

Back in Hyde Park, He Says He Just Read Headlines of O'Connor Reply.

By the United Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 19.—President Roosevelt turned tonight from international to domestic problems as he prepared to meet tomorrow with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, presumably for a discussion of plans to dispose of the Nation's huge wheat surplus.

The Chief Executive is expected to hear from Wallace a report on negotiations to have world markets absorb at least 100,000,000 bushels of surplus grain. He said recently he hoped to have it in operation soon but admitted there still remained considerable detail to overcome.

Mr. Roosevelt returned to his Hyde Park home this morning after a one-day excursion into Canada.

The President, reminded that Representative O'Connor, of New York, had accepted the challenge of his party "purge," said he had only read the headlines of O'Connor's reply to his charge of being a "New Deal betrayer."

Likewise, he was reticent about the sale of an estate across the Hudson from his home to Father Divine, colored New York cult leader.

Mr. Roosevelt will be at Hyde Park for the next ten days on office routine.

Hepburn Opposes Waterway.

By the Associated Press.

Notwithstanding opposition of Premier Mitchell Hepburn, of Ontario, the State Department intends to urge negotiation of a treaty with Canada for development of the St Lawrence waterway.

That was the consensus of department officials yesterday following publication of Premier Hepburn's letter to Canadian Prime Minister MacKenzie King, saying:

"Irrespective of any propaganda or squeeze play that may be concocted by you, you may rest assured that this (Ontario) government will resist any effort to force us to expend public funds in such an unwarranted manner."

Officials here said they did not believe Hepburn's opposition in itself would wreck prospects of the project, which President Roosevelt urged Canada Thursday to accept.

President Roosevelt had answered in advance, they said, Hepburn's argument that the waterway would injure railroads.

Are These Men "Betrayers" To The Democratic Party?

WHY ARE THEY BEING "PURGED?"

Robert Albright finds there are many reasons why President Roosevelt is waging an active, personal campaign in the Democratic primaries instead of giving the assgnment to his political lieutenants.
